Self-Denial Went for Nothing. A young woman was staying at Jack's home, and seeing a box of candy on her table, she went into her room and helped herself. His mother told him how wrong it was, and said he must apologize. That night, before going into her room, he was heard to murmur: "If I has to 'pologize, wish I took more than one piece."

My Business. Let people's tongues and actions be what they will, my business is to be good, and I make the same speech to myself that a piece of gold or an emerald or purple should: "Let people talk and act as they please, I must be an emerald and keep my color."—Marcus Aurelius.

Although detectives are on the lookout, Van Dorn and Desiree make their escape in an automobile which they abstract from the garage. The officers follow and when Van Dorn stops to get gasoline, they take possession of the machine, leaving Van Dorn and Desiree without means of resuming their pursuit. They are obliged to go to a nearby inn for the night and the structure burns to the ground. Van Dorn carries Desiree to safety and returns to the inn for his personal effects. He is overcome by smoke and is rescued by the garage keeper who cannot afford to let the young man die, because he owes him for ten gallons of gasoline.

Desiree begs bystanders to restore Van Dorn because she loves him. Van Dorn hears, sits up and says he is all right. The garage man offers Van Dorn a job saying he can thus work out his debt, and realizing his utter helplessness, he accepts. The garage man urges that Van Dorn should marry Desiree in view of the circumstances which are apt to provoke scandal and they seek a minister. The couple arrayed in blankets, are wedded, and the sympathetic minister and his wife give them both outfits of clothing.

The pair start housekeeping in a cottage and two years later, there is a knock at their door. Wilkins is at the threshold, carrying two heavy bags. He comes in, places the bags on the table and announces that after carrying forty million with him for two years, he has sickened of the job and has decided to walk straight hence forth. Van Dorn and Desiree look at the money and at each other. They don't want the money, for they are rich in each others love. But to let forty millions be bandied about without a protector—what idiocy! They appeal to the audience for guidance. Shall we take it or not? What would you do?

"TOO MANY MILLIONS"

At Dickie Theatre, January 14th, 1919.

Walsingham Van Dorn a handsome young chap who is ignored by his two uncles, bankers and brokers in Wall Street, makes a precarious livelihood as a book agent. He sells one copy of a work to Desiree Lane, a daughter of the rich, who promises to mail him a check in lieu of cash payment. Van Dorn is spending his last cent in a restaurant when he reads in a newspaper that his uncles have been killed in an automobile accident and that he is heir to forty millions of dollars.

Going to the office of his dead uncle Van Dorn meets Wilkins, the confidential manager, who gives him a roll of money and starts the young man on his career as a millionaire. He goes the pace for a time and is disgusted until Wilkins tells him to settle down and that he has provided a handsome home for him. They go to the place and arrive just as Desiree, whose home it had been, is leaving it sorrowfully. Desiree's father had been brought to ruin by Van Dorn's uncles, and the shock when he finds himself a pauper kills him.

Van Dorn takes possession of the home without having seen Desiree or learning her sad story. Desiree applies to the restaurant manager for employment and becomes cashier. She learns from the waitress that Van Dorn dines there and after reading the account of the death of his uncles in the newspapers she resolves to take the law in her own hands and attempt to recover the stolen property by force if need be. Hence, when Van Dorn awakes in his room the next morning, he finds Desiree seated by his bedside, demanding that he restore her father's millions to her.

Van Dorn agrees to return the money, but at that moment, a clerk from the Bass Brothers' office, rushes in with the information that Wilkins has decamped with Van Dorn's forty millions of dollars, all securities having been converted into cash by him. Even the house in which Van Dorn has been living has been attached, on the strength of a power of attorney which Van Dorn had foolishly executed to Wilkins. Van Dorn decides to hunt Wilkins down and demand restitution. He asks Desiree to join him in the chase, to which she gives her assent.

Although detectives are on the lookout, Van Dorn and Desiree make their escape in an automobile which they abstract from the garage. The officers follow and when Van Dorn stops to get gasoline, they take possession of the machine, leaving Van Dorn and Desiree without means of resuming their pursuit. They are obliged to go to a nearby inn for the night and the structure burns to the ground. Van Dorn carries Desiree to safety and returns to the inn for his personal effects. He is overcome by smoke and is rescued by the garage keeper who cannot afford to let the young man die, because he owes him for ten gallons of gasoline.

Desiree begs bystanders to restore Van Dorn because she loves him. Van Dorn hears, sits up and says he is all right. The garage man offers Van Dorn a job saying he can thus work out his debt, and realizing his utter helplessness, he accepts. The garage man urges that Van Dorn should marry Desiree in view of the circumstances which are apt to provoke scandal and they seek a minister. Pols an Old City. Poles was a Thracian colony when the Romans swooped down and took it in 178 B. C., and a stormy existence followed this descent of the world-conquerors. In 1370 it was virtually blotted out of existence when the Genoese, daring forbears of Admiral Christopher Columbus, defeated the Venetians in a great sea fight off the port, and then wrecked the town—and kept it out of the annals for a century and a half. It came back Buzly and was an important again and since 1815 was Austria's principal naval harbor.
