Douglas Fairbanks In "Headin' South"

From the sun-baked desert of Arizona to the snow-tipped mountains at Truckee, Cal., is the contrast in the scenery offered by Douglas Fairbanks in his new Arcraft picture, "Headin' South," a rip-roaring tale of Mexican raiders, which will be the attraction at the Dicke Theatre on Decoration Day. The snow scenes are particularly effective after the audience is shown a broad sweep of the Mexican border, the desert lands of our country.

Those who believe in "seeing America first" will be more than satisfied with the scenery that makes "Headin' South" the most distinctive film of the season. Considerable expense was attached to transporting over two hundred cowboys and Mexicans to the various locations, but the results attained more than justified the expenditure.

With Fairbanks in his story of two borders, Mexican and Canadian, appear prominently Catherine McDonald a recent discovery in films, and Frank Campeau. As the mysterious rider of the desert, Fairbanks personifies thrilling romance, and rescues the girl in an unusual, acrobatic manner.

At the Dicke Theatre, Decoration Day.

Striving After Strength.

We think that we shall win truth by striving after strength, instead of knowing that we shall gain strength just in the degree that we become true.—Phillips Brooks.
