Registered German alien enemies male or female changing their place of residence to another place within the same registration district shall immediately report such change to the registration officer of the registration district and present such registration card for the purpose of having endorsed thereon by such registration officer the change of residence.

A registered German alien enemy, male or female, who desires to change his or her place of residence within another registration district must obtain a permit. Such German alien must present himself or herself to the registration officer of the district in which he or she then resides and make application for the permit on a form provided by the registration officer, and present his or her registration card to the registration officer for the purpose of having the permit of change of residence, if granted, endorsed upon the registration card. CHICAGO HAS BIGGEST WAR EXPOSITION

Country Has Never Seen Anything To Compare With Great Show Now in Progress

Judged by the indications of the opening day, a million and a half will visit the great government War Exposition at Chicago, under the direction of the U. S. Committee on Public Information and the State Council of Defense. It rained almost from the opening of the gates until late in the afternoon, yet more than 133,000 people attended. And the advance sale of tickets is the basis for estimating that nearly or quite that number will pass through the gates each day until the show closes on September 19.

There were no two opinions about the exposition on opening day: all agreed it was the neatest approach to modern war-making that America has ever seen, or is likely to see. The trophies in themselves—implements of war from trench knives and helmets to airplanes and big guns, taken by the Americans, the French, the Belgians and the Italians on the battlefield—seem enough to have equipped a great army. But it is equipment which will never serve the Germans again, for every piece and parcel of it shows the battering of the Allied armies; each shows what the American soldiers are doing to many times as much more equipment day by day—putting it out of commission.

Above all things the show is an education in where the money goes which loyal Americans subscribe for Liberty Bonds, War Savings Stamps, the Red Cross, the Salvation Army, Y. M. C. A., and every other form of war aid and relief.

As entertainment, and to give the thrill of war, there are the daily battles—too realistic to be called sham battles—with big guns roaring, machine guns snapping, the airplanes overhead and the navy co-operating. Every visitor has the chance to see the American soldiers and sailors at work—and they do work.

Just one difficulty has been found in putting on the battles—the soldiers all kick and kick hard against manning the German trenches. There are no volunteers for that job; it takes orders to get them to do it.

The air show, particularly, as planned for the last week, is something to remember. There is a "flying circus" of all nations, seasoned men—French, British and Italian—who do stunts over Lake Michigan which they did over the battlefields, and thereby become "aces."

DAY OF PRAYER FOR SCHOOLS

Next Sabbath is the National Day of Prayer for Schools. Rev. Ralph Kendall Schwab will observe it by preaching in the First Evangelical Church at 7:30 p. m. o'clock, on the subject, "The Bible and the Public School."

It is appropriate at the beginning of the school year, when over 20,000 children and young people are being mobilized in the public schools of America, that thought should be given to the great American school system and that prayer should be offered for the teachers and pupils of our institutions of training.

The observance of a Sabbath early in September as a day of prayer for schools was first suggested by the National Reform Association of Pittsburgh, Pa., which was organized over fifty years ago to aid in maintaining Christian laws, usages and customs in America. It has been a leader in various reforms and is now seeking for laws which will permit the reading of the Bible in all the schools of the land.

Teachers, pupils and parents are specially invited to attend the First Evangelical church next Sabbath evening.

GREAT LAKES SAILORS HELP CONSERVE FOOD

Boys Well Fed, But "Doing Their Bit"
Toward Saving Wheat, Meat and Sugar—All Waste Utilized.

Three Meals Daily for Less Than Forty-one Cents—Beans Favorite Food.

"We are told to save food, but the army and navy have everything they want," is a more or less familiar complaint heard from occasional civilians when asked to save that extra slice of bread or lump of sugar for our boys in the service.

Disregarding the fact that these men who are fighting our battles are the men who we are conserving for, the complaining civilian goes even farther and declares that food saved through Food Administration regulations is carelessly wasted in army and navy camps.

In order to dispel any possible belief in this bit of German propaganda, the Division of Education of the Illinois Food Administration decided to send a representative on a personal visit to the largest navy camp in the world, the Great Lakes Naval Training Station at Great Lakes, Ill.

Boys Well Fed.

Here is the result of the investigation, which included visits to the mess halls and interviews with the paymaster in charge of supplies, commissary stewards, and cooks each man at the station. The boys are well fed, as robust boys who drill and work in the open should be, but not a scrap of food is wasted.

The general opinion among commissary stewards at the Great Lakes is that more food can be saved by allowing the men to express their choice in the quantity and kinds of food on the day's menu than could be possible were certain set amounts placed before each man regardless of his likes and dislikes or appetite.

Cafeteria Plan Preferred.

At Camp Boone, the incoming detention camp, whose cook, one "Pucky Schwartz," is known to every man at the Great Lakes for the generous way in which he looks out for the welfare of his men, the cafeteria system is believed to be the best means of conserving food.

As the men line up for "chow" they pass a long counter in a single line, where they make known exactly what they want and are cautioned to take no more than they can eat. For example, if a man does not care for bread, he passes that up, but perhaps he has a special liking for beans, in which case he announces in the vernacular of the navy, "Heavy on the beans," and the man at the counter gives him an extra helping.

Beans Favorite Dish.

And speaking of beans, Pucky Schwartz, who has fed United States sailors for 14 years, declares that despite the prevailing belief in the unpopularity of beans among the men in the service, he has found nevertheless that beans are the most popular dish in the navy. After beans, plos find the greatest favor among the men, he declares.

"You won't find a scrap of food wasted here," he said as he led the way through the immaculate kitchens of his galley, stopping now and then to ask you to hazard a guess as to the number of sausages cooking in one of the huge copper kettles, and smiling at your look of amazement as he tells you the kettle contains 1,000 pounds of pork sausages all of which will be consumed by hungry "blue jackets" of this one particular camp at their evening meal.

All kitchens and mess halls as well as barracks are inspected at least once weekly, at which time not the slightest detail escapes the inspecting officer, who runs white gloved hands over shelves and pokes into all available cracks and crevices in a thoroughly industrial search for dirt.

The Great Lakes Naval Training Station is clean, the boys are well fed, and each and every one of them is doing his share toward conservation of food, and utilization of waste. If civilians do as much as these enlisted boys of our navy are doing, Uncle Sam will have no cause to worry about food waste.

When a quantity of left-over bread accumulates, for instance, the boys usually find themselves eating bread pudding, or breaded pork chops the next day.

No Sugar Bowls on Tables.

No sugar bowls are in evidence in any of the 44 mess halls at the Great Lakes. Sugar and milk are both put into the tea and coffee before it reaches the men in order that there be no possible waste of these two articles.

Three Meals for 41 Cents.

Because of the strict economy observed by all commissary stewards and cooks each man in the Great Lakes is given three well balanced meals a day at an average cost of not quite 41 cents a day.

The government allows $10,295.71 daily for feeding 25,430 men at the Great Lakes, but of this a large proportion is saved each day. This saving from March to July of this year was all in bread and meat, the two commodities the civilian population has also been asked to conserve.

"We are using a trifle over the average amount of fresh vegetables and fruits and milk at present, as we have been ordered to save the canned goods for the men of the fleets who need it more than we do here on land," said one commissary steward when questioned as to what they were using most.

Ten paymasters with the rank of Ensign have recently been sent to the Great Lakes from the east to attend a school for bakers and cooks where all phases of scientific cooking will be taught.

During January, February and March of this year 1,228,032.42 pounds of fresh meat were consumed in addition to 123,452.25 pounds of smoked meat. Besides this 9,600,780 fresh eggs were used.

As these amounts were divided up among 20,000 men, it is evident that any mother with a son at the Great Lakes need have no cause to worry for fear her boy will not be properly fed; but in spite of the fact that the total cost covering the feeding of all men connected with the station during the first three months of this year was $861,150.41, the average ratio was but two and one-fourth pounds to each man, which included all refuse, even empty cans, etc.

Utilize Garbage.

A thoroughly efficient garbage disposal plan is in operation at the Great Lakes. All refuse is collected in 60-gallon cans and the cans themselves are loaded on trucks and shipped a short distance for hog feed. By this system of shipping the garbage in the original cans, the strictest sanitation is observed, as the garbage is never touched after it leaves the galley.

The navy also has its own meat inspectors at the Union Stock Yards, Chicago, and all meat issued to the Great Lakes is passed upon by the government agent before it is put into the cans, and again on its arrival at the station. A final inspection is also made before the meat is served to the men.

All kitchens and mess halls as well as barracks are inspected at least once weekly, at which time not the slightest detail escapes the inspecting officer, who runs white gloved hands over shelves and pokes into all available cracks and crevices in a thoroughly industrial search for dirt.

The Great Lakes Naval Training Station is clean, the boys are well fed, and each and every one of them is doing his share toward conservation of food, and utilization of waste. If civilians do as much as these enlisted boys of our navy are doing, Uncle Sam will have no cause to worry about food waste.

If you see a sugar bowl for public use in a public eating house, the proprietor is violating the Food Administration regulations. Report him to the Bureau of Investigation, 713 Conway Building, Chicago.
