Rev. and Mrs. Anderson were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lacey in honor of their daughter Genevieve's birthday.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Griffen visited their son, Arthur, in Chicago, Monday.

A ROMANCE OF HAPPY VALLEY

Saturday, April 5

In the toll-road region of the Southland is Happy Valley. Happy it is in name and local fame, where life is lived in calico gowns and denim breeches, with a change of course for Sunday best.

The keeper of the boarding house is John L. Logan, a prosperous farmer and a bossy old father. His wife is an immortal of a by-way fireside, a psalm-singing sister in the church, with faith in the good and service for all. Their son, John, just growing up, learns the city's lure from a chance boarder, and wants to go to New York.

Among the neighbors are William Timberlake and his quaint daughter, Jennie, who slyly likes John Jr. Her father wishes her to dress as her mother did when she lived. But Jennie wishes to primp up for Sunday, and after stormy argument, designs a dress after some mysterious city fashion book.

When Mrs. Logan and her boy go to church, the mother quietly asks the minister to pray that her son be converted, and his desire for the city removed. Jennie and her father are at church that day, she obviously prepared to shatter all competition for the boy's glances. The minister expends his eloquence to advantage. John finds the great faith; and afterwards he becomes betrothed in vivid awkwardness to Jennie.

But later on a fall day at the plowing, he back-slides. Jennie hears him and reproves. He defiantly announces he is going to New York. He is going to return in a year, rich, indeed, very rich. At first she declares she will be married by then, but later agrees to wait.

At home John has a difficult time getting away, finally fleeing in the night, after arousing the house with the clamor of his awkward boots. His father delivers him to the great adventure with bitter words, his mother with one desperate embrace.

Finances grew very bad indeed with the father during the eight years that passed. And never a word from the boy. But at last he succeeded, and he returned most opportunely; and, fortunate one among sons and lovers that he was, he found mother still there and Jennie too. And Happy Valley became happy once again. But not without excitement, for so unusual a homecoming as that has never been told in song, story or film, a real mystery that only the full film may tell.

LOWDEN G. O. P. BOOM HEARD NATIONALLY

Favorite son presidential booms are to be expected in political ranks at this time, but those who follow such events closely say the rumblings from Illinois are of more than local nature back of Governor Lowden as the Republican candidate in 1920. From plowboy to multi-millionaire shows the climb of Illinois' governor and speaks of his ability. The recent visit of Job E. Hodges, New York Republican leader, to the west for a conference with Lowden indicates that the Illinoisian has attracted the party heads. Lowden was born and reared in Iowa.

TICKLES TYPEWRITER DESPITE MILLIONS

Even though her father, Harry Payne Whitney is multi-millionaire, Miss Flora Payne Whitney keeps right on plowing a typewriter in the capacity of stenographer. She learned stenography for Red Cross work but when peace came she went to work in the Republican Women's National Executive committee headquarters.
