OLIVE THOMAS

New Dicke Star 1919-1920 Season.

Just a few years ago a little unsophisticated girl started life as a stock girl at $3 a week in a Pittsburgh department store. She was in short dresses, with her hair down her back, and went around bragging about how lucky she was to be the youngest saleslady in the store. That little girl was Olive Thomas. Fate, however, had a brighter future for her than to stand behind a counter all day selling gingham. Her career as a stock girl was cut short by the arrival of a musical aunt from Boston who was shocked to find that Olive's musical education had been sadly neglected and that the limit of her capabilities was to play "Alexander's Rag-time Band" on the piano with one finger.

SATURDAY UP STAIRS AND DOWN WITH OLIVE THOMAS at DICKE THEATRE SATURDAY

Aunt Emma decided it was high time Olive started upon a professional career and with the little shop girl in tow started for New York. From the moment of her arrival in the Big City, Olive's star began to ascend. She first posed for photographic art studies. Then painters, attracted by her youth and beauty engaged her to pose for them. It was wonderful pay for Olive—in those days—fifty cents an hour.

She was in constant demand by Harrison Fisher, Penrhyn Stanlaws, Haskell Coffin and other famous painters. Harrison Fisher labelled her "the most beautiful girl in the world" and the title has stuck.

Anyone who has heard of the Ziegfeld Follies has heard of Olive Thomas. She helped to make the Follies famous. Thousands of aspiring girls throughout the country would sacrifice anything to become members of the famous organization. And how did this unsophisticated little girl from Pittsburgh do it? Of course the fame she had already won as an artist's model helped some, but— "I had no letters of introduction or anything," she explains. "I simply asked them for a job and got it. I didn't do much at first—just posed around, standing in boxes and frames while some one sang to me."

But as Olive says, that was at first. For she immediately sprang into the limelight and soon became the toast of Broadway.

Then there arrived on the scene a shrewd motion picture producer, and signed up the little beauty for a series of screen productions. Broadway will never forgive the movies for luring Olive Thomas away from the centre of the bright lights. Beauties come and go, Ziegfeld sends to the four corners of the earth to get them for his exacting patrons of the Frolic and Follies, but no matter what the degree of their pulchritude or how sensational their debut, the professional Broadwayite will say, "Yes, yes, I know; but you should have seen Olive Thomas."

Olive is Irish, and that means that she is interesting. She has brains and a sense of humor along with her beauty. No more is necessary to conquer the whole world.

In pictures she was at once a tremendous success. She gained the same popularity with movie fans as she had with theatregoers, and soon forged her way into the front rank. She showed cleverness and versatility to a rare degree.

Miss Thomas will be given the widest opportunities, and with big stories, elaborate productions, the finest of direction and an exploitation campaign more comprehensive than anything ever attempted before, she can be expected to become, besides one of the screen's choicest favorites, a real box office star with pulling powers of the calibre equalled by only a very select few.

Olive Thomas is the kind of a star whom everyone loves to work for, because she is without the too frequent malady, "swelled head." Miss Thomas is loyal, sincere, and an earnest worker, and there is nothing "up stage" about her. Excess of dignity is as provocative to her as the red flag is to the bull, and she loves to take its possessor down all she can. That's why she loves to startle, and even shock, over-dignified individuals. Underneath all her fooling, however, there is a bubbling humanity, a freedom from sarcasm, that wins her way into the hearts of all.

PURE INSURANCE

In the "Mutual Underwriter" under date of November 15, 1914, Frank M. Speakman, Certified Public Accountant and Professor of Insurance at Temple University Philadelphia, gives his views on life insurance in an article entitled "True Insurance" which in my opinion, is a plain and truthful explanation of this little-understood subject. Mr. Speakman says: "As a people, we are old in making use of insurance as a safeguard against 'slipping coqs' in our individual efforts, but we are comparatively youthful in our understanding of the forms of insurance that are best fitted for our individual needs." "Insurance is a provision for indemnity against loss", as aptly stated by "Mr. Webster." The more thought we give to the subject of insurance the more we are convinced that the short terse, definition as given, fully covers the question and should enable us to grasp the idea that, if there is no loss, there can be no true insurance. The human interest in true insurance should consider at least four contingencies that result in a loss and are, therefore, subjects for indemnity: (1) Loss by reason of death; (2) Loss by reason of accident; (3) Loss by reason of illness; (4) Loss by reason of old age. We may not all be of one mind as to the best method to be pursued in order to provide for indemnity in the event of the happening of any of the foregoing contingencies, but we can agree that if, as individuals, we seek indemnity, against loss by death, we should be able to secure it without being compelled to pay for something which is foreign to the subject of insurance. After all, method is but means to an end; and so long as the method used leads to a certain end we should not antagonize methods. Rather, we should uphold results attained and stand steadfastly for any method that will give results sought.

In pure insurance the result sought is, in the case of indemnity against loss by death, to provide this indemnity at the least possible cost to the insured. This can be done only by purchasing the kind of insurance that provides for this particular contingency of death. Whatever plan is pursued by any company, or society, or association, whether "Old Line", "Assessment", "Fraternal", "Stipulated premium" or what not—all contracts of life insurance provide for indemnity against death, but when the same contract provides for certain so-called "privileges" or provisions in the event of the insured being alive at the specified time, then of necessity must the rate be increased and the protection be limited, which otherwise the insured would be able to secure.

Mr. Speakman states further that: "Taking the extreme case of an endowment contract, one finds a provision for payment in the event of death within a specified time, and a provision for payment in the event of being alive at the end of the time. A separate rate or premium is computed for each contingency and the two rates combined constitute the endowment rate. This may be but an adaptation of the Biblical expression, "Ye die, yet ye live", but the writer has yet to learn of any one who has collected on both ends of an endowment policy. This illustration is a lesser degree may be applied to any one promise that carries with it a right to the insured to receive something prior to the happening of the particular contingency for which the protection was taken, and would include all rights to values in the event of lapse, i. e. cash, loan, paid up or extended insurance values—where a premium is charged for a life insurance contract (policy) which includes these "values". It would follow that a lower premium can be required in cases where such values are not granted and should be taken into account in computing the premium."

The following hypothetical case will illustrate to a certain extent Mr. Speakman's idea.

John Doe, aged 30, buys three policies of $1000.00 each in the same company on the same day.

One an "ordinary life" policy for which he pays approximately $18.96 per thousand.

One a "20 payment life" policy for which he pays approximately $26.83 per thousand.

One a "20 year endowment" policy for which he pays approximately $41.54 per thousand.

Mr. Doe carries these policies for 15 years and then dies, and the life insurance company gives his widow 3 one thousand dollar checks or $3000.

Number one policy cost Mr. Doe 15 times $18.96 or $284.40 and his widow received $1000.

Number 2 policy cost Mr. Doe 15 times $26.83 or $402.45 and his widow received $1000.

Number 3 policy cost Mr. Doe 15 times 41.54 or $623.10 and his widow received $1000.

Why was Mr. Doe paying more for two of his 1000's than for the other one. Oh, yes, but had Mr. Doe lived one policy would have been paid up for life and the other would have given him $1000 in cash. But Mr. Doe didn't live. He could not do 2 things both live and die on the policies that he bought, and yet this is precisely what he must do, if he would realize on the full amount of his money.

Life insurance agents of good, had and indifferent ability are "educating" the insuring public every day to believe that insurance can be carried and be profitable to the insured whether he lives or dies.

This is an erroneous idea the result of which is causing the loss of vast amounts yearly to those who endeavor to protect their dependents from hardship and want brought on by untimely death.
