TWENTY-TWO YEARS AGO IN THE REPORTER

From the issue of Sept. 9, 1897.

Five cars of freight were ditched at La Grange Sunday morning among them being a car containing 5,000 young turkeys, chickens and ducks. People of La Grange are now fattening up their Thanksgiving dinners so miraculously hatched to them.

A party of local people visited Lemont and various points of interest along the canal last Saturday. The trip was made in two carriages and two wagonettes and the route embraced Lemont, Willow Springs and Summit the return trip being by way of La Grange. The members of the party were: Messrs and Mesdames L. Mertz, G. C. Moor, Arthur Holt, J. W. Worley, Crouse, John Bradbury, Capron Stanley, Fred Lempke, H. Faul, Miss Susan Faul, Mesdames D. O. Cole, John Rutherford, Nellie and David Deraming and Miss Mabel Rutherford.

William Bateman, one of the pioneer residents of Du Page County, died at his home on Maple avenue, last Sunday, September 5th, at the ripe old age of 82 years.

Mrs. D. K. Craig received seven prizes for fancy work of various kinds at the Wheaton fair last week.

J. F. Clevenger has disposed of his home in East Grove to V. Fredenhagen.

R. D. Parker returned from Buffalo Tuesday evening where he had been in attendance at the recent G. A. R. encampment.

Mrs. M. J. Kenyon took several first prizes at the County fair last week for fine needlework.

Geo. Chatfield of Milton Junction, Wis., visited a few days with his sister, Miss Elizabeth Chatfield, the first of the week and together with Miss Cora and Elmer Escher went across the lake to St. Joe Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Sharp and family have returned from a very pleasant visit among Mr. Sharp's relatives at La Carne and Cleveland, O., and Burlington, Ont.

"BILL HENRY"

At Dicke Theatre Thursday, Sept. 18th.

In this Charles Ray plays the part of an ambitious country boy who sets out to make a fortune selling electric vibrators for which he has secured the agency, together with a book giving all the salesmanship talk that is a paved way to success.

He tries to demonstrate on an old man who is so jarred out of memory of his pain that he chases the salesman from his place, smashes up his bicycle and throws the pieces in the road. Bill Henry walks to town and reaches a small hotel conducted by his uncle, who agrees to give him a job as night clerk.

Another arrival at the hotel is Lela Mason, who has come all the way from Keokuk, Iowa to claim her inheritance to a farm from an uncle, deceased. She discovers it is swamp land and worthless, and retires to her room in the hotel where she bursts into tears, for she is financially embarrassed.

Bill Henry hears her and sends his aunt to see what is the matter. He tries to give her money he had saved to buy himself a new ring, but she refuses to accept it. The traveling men invite him into a poker game and, despite his uncle's warnings, he accepts with a big idea.

He proves an adept with cards and wins a big stake. This is sufficient to buy the farm of the girl. He rushes to the real estate agent and makes the purchase. Then the real estate agent gets a message from an oil company that real oil has been discovered there and they have options on all property but this farm and urge him to get it.

Bill Henry overhears the conversation and urges the agent to sell the property for him and turn the profit over to the girl as an additional bequest from her uncle. The agent determines to get away with the girl and the money.

Bill Henry is not the kind of a youth to be maligned, so he makes a jump for the agent. A desperate fight ensues in which Bill Henry succeeds in wringing from the agent a confession in a most novel way. Of course, there is a happy conclusion, but just how it is all brought about should be seen to be appreciated.

—THAT ENDS WELL— By EUNA FOREST.

Mollie had been playing a game, a very interesting and secret game, and she had never been so happy in all her life. The game was "Hide and Seek" of an entirely new, and romantic nature, and Mollie returned from her last exploit in high, but subdued spirits.

Eleanor, the married sister, whom she visited, must not suspect the delightful pastime of her summer afternoons. Eleanor, strictly conventional, would be horror stricken. The secret game had begun by chance, and on Mollie's side was the advantage.

When she had arisen early one inviting morning slipping silently down past closed rooms to a dewy garden beneath, she had intended to take but a brief dip in the sea and when Mollie, disporting herself among the waves, looked down the isolated beach, she fancied herself monarch—or perhaps monarch "poss" of all she surveyed.

As she sat upon a great stone in the early sunshine, she saw, however, that another as ambitious as she, was swimming about in the blue.

Mollie in embarrassment, darted again into the water, going further out than she had heretofore ventured, and being roughly brought to her senses by the swimmer himself.

"It is dangerous for you to be out here alone," he said. "I am returning to the hotel. You'd better come back."

Mollie suddenly weakened, requested breathlessly, his help.

When the two reached the shore, she resting in the warm sands, thanked him, beginning in her pretty way, a sort of "holding" conversation.

The man at least was held by it, for he made no motion to carry out his intention of returning to the hotel. And this was Mollie's advantage from the beginning. She recognized at once in her rescuer, a certain noted curate from the city, whose arrival at the resort had been heralded a few days before. Eleanor, indeed, was an attendant at his city church.

But the curate himself was left unenlightened as to Mollie's knowledge of his identity, and ignorant of her own. It was as they were pleasantly chatting that she waved her hand in quick farewell, and literally disappeared.

Mr. Sutherland, Eleanor innocently regretted, was returning to the city at the end of the fortnight and she feared she would have no opportunity of entertaining him at the cottage. Mollie, in her secret planning, decided to completely disappear from Mr. Sutherland's life before the end of his fortnight, leaving to him ever after but a romantic, and, she hoped, a pleasing memory.

So, she was seated demurely reading in the rector's favorite book as he came down into the glen. Her dress was blue cotton, her white collar and cuffs neat and plain.

Her wide eyes expressed surprise at the rector's appearance. His keen eyes expressed pleasure. When Mollie would have politely departed, he begged her to remain.

The sun proclaimed the noon luncheon hour, when she finally took from Mr. Sutherland, the volume of poems which he had been reading aloud.

"Good bye," laughed Mollie, and was instantly lost to view among the trees. Though the rector arose in quest of her, Mollie was gone. Which branching path she had chosen he did not know. But he went back to his seat beneath the oak—to sit again and dream of her. Then at last, Eleanor brought Mollie's fascinating game to an unexpected end.

"Mr. Sutherland, the rector is coming to dinner at five tonight," she said, "I cannot be back from our motor trip until six. Be here to welcome him, Mollie, and, do make a pleasing impression, dear. Mr. Sutherland's opinion is worth while."

Mollie sighed. So she was to have no memory romance after all, and to the man she would be but a commonplace girl, in a commonplace, modern home.

Freda was admitting the tall figure of the rector as she reached the foot of the stairs. It was impossible for Mollie to retreat. In desperation she slipped into a hall closet beneath the stairs.

Mollie knew after a suffocating lapse in the closet that he had made himself comfortable for a long wait. Hopefully Mollie fumbled along the wall, finding there evidently a maid's enveloping apron. Frantically she stuffed her hair into the starched cap's crown, her feet, sandals and all, went into the shoes, then Mollie opened the closet door.

The rector stared and Mollie stared at a reflection of herself in the mirror. Freda's borrowed apron was far from clean. Mollie's hair was escaping from Freda's cap. Speechlessly, she fled up the stair.

It was Freda who knocked presently at Mollie's door. "That man," she said, disgustedly, "says he must speak to 'other maid.' He don't believe me that I'm the only maid. You go tell him."

With the laughter light of 'hide and seek' still in her eyes, Mollie came, very prettily dressed down the stair. Eleanor returning later, was astonished to hear her rector happily proclaiming:

"I'm going to see that you stay found, now that I have you at last, Mollie dear."

OYSTER RAISING IN HOLLAND

Highly Scientific Methods Employed in That Country Have Been Remarkably Successful.

In the industry represented by oyster cultivation, Holland is the most systematic in its operations and employs more elaborate methods than any other country in the world. The numerous sounds that indent the coast of Holland, particularly in the region of the River Scheldt, afford excellent facilities for the propagation of the oyster and enable the country to conduct the most successful oyster industry in Europe. Public dredging is not permitted, as the result of that system was the threatened exhaustion of the fisheries, and the beds have been carefully surveyed and specific tracts are leased to individuals and companies, who are thus enabled to conduct the propagation of the oyster in a systematic manner that insures the best results from the territory available. Many growers lease several tracts in different localities, and adapted to different purposes, which facilitates the various operations, as the oysters can be shifted from one place to another, according to the season and the stage of development. A few of the oystermen plant shells on the banks, as is done in many places in this country, but the largest and most successful propagators are equipped with their own tanks and ponds, located in convenient shallow bays, in which they carry on the culture.
