Interest Attaches to Plowing Under Green Manure and Saving of Seed.

Material Must Be Given Chance to Become at Least Partially Decomposed Before the Following Crop is Planted.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.) May is the month when a large part the crimson clover crop in the Southeastern states may be harvested. Special interest attaches to the plowing under of the green manure crop and the saving of the seed, the first because of the high price of fertilizer and the second because of the high price of seed. Whichever use is to be made of the crop, preparation should be made well in advance of the harvest season, and especial thought should be given to the crop which is to follow the crimson clover. Plow Crop Under.

Crimson clover, like any green ma-Under the new law fixed by the nure crop, should be plowed under at 51st General Assembly all taxes least two weeks before the following crop is planted. If planting is made on the freshly turned mass of leaves and stems, the results are likely to be worse than if no green manure had been used. The green material must be given a chance to become at least partially decomposed, and the bacteria must have an opportunity to remove some of the injurious materials that are formed by organic decay. Usually it is inadvisable to follow a crimson-clover green manure crop with any early-planted crop like cetton or early potatoes unless the land can be plowed by the first week of May. Corn is the crop most commonly used after crimson clover, as it need not be planted until the first of June.

Save Supply of Seed. There is every reason this year why farmers who are to grow crimson clover next year should save at least enough seed for their own use. Seed production is not a difficult matter and is, indeed, a common practice in many of the Southeastern states. The only equipment required is some form of seed stripper with which to remove the ripe heads. The seed need not be thrashed or hulled, as in the case of red clover and other clovers, but is often sown in the hull, just as it be gathered hist as the first blossoms are beginning to wither, and harvesting must be completed within eight or nine days, as the seeds shatter badly when thoroughly ripe. Details of the construction of the seed strippers and other matters relating to seed production are discussed in Farmers' Bullety, Illinois, on the first day of March, tin 646, which farmers are urged to
