The Correct Stationery

When you write a letter, whether it be to a dear friend, a business firm or a stranger, your first thought should be for the stationery you use. "Correct" stationery is hardly more expensive than just any old kind and your correspondents will have more kindly feelings toward you if you use the better grades. Not only should the color of the paper be harmonious, but the quality of both it and the envelope and the shape of the latter.

Through your correspondence you express your personality. Be sure your stationery is correct.
