Friday, November 12th Owen MOORE in 'The Poor Simp'

Nobody had any sympathy for him. They called him a simp. He bought a dog and a bunch of orchids to give his girl but he was such a poor simp he forgot all about them. And that wasn't the only bone he pulled. Everything he did went wrong and even his best girl threw him down. Then he got hit on the head. The blow worked wonders and the whole world seemed brighter. A mile a minute Comedy with a million laughs.

Clara Kimball Young

in "For the Soul of Raphael"

From the great love story by Marah Ellis Ryan. Imagine the magnificent settings of the golden age as a background for the most romantic story of its character ever written. Picture the wild adventures of the youth of the early 50's when might ruled right, when deeds of daring were greater than the knights of old. Imagine beauty adrift in those dangerous days and then SEE with your own eyes the dramatic events that follow in this simply wonderful story, unquestionably the best Marah Ellis Ryan ever wrote. The love story you'll talk about for weeks.

ANOTHER WOMAN'S SCARF—She found another woman's scarf in her husband's pocket the next morning. Otherwise he would have gotten away with his story. And when further search revealed a wine bill for two and a cloth mask, it was all up with him. He had been at the Carnival of Flowers with another man's wife! This is one of the complications of the most delicious farce-comedies on the screen, "HER BELOVED VILLAIN." If you enjoy a sparkling farce and a hearty laugh, don't miss this picture.
