WORLDS GREATEST ZOO TO BE NEAR DOWNERS GROVE

Wild Animals Will Be Seen in Surroundings Similar to Native Haunts is Plan.

Because this new McCormick Zoological garden is looked upon by suburbanites in this vicinity as a "local institution" much interest has been taken in the plans for the development of this $5,000,000 project. Picture to yourself a magnificent panorama, consisting of forest, field, rocks and rivers, from a central point on which one can stand and see all the beautiful wild creatures of the earth assembled, each in his own peculiar habitat, and yet forming an harmonious whole. Such a plan is to be carried out in connection with Chicago's new Zoo which is to be located in the Forest Preserve of Cook County.

Is Mrs. McCormick's Gift Mrs. Edith Rockefeller McCormick, after years of residence abroad, but ever mindful of her home in Chicago, has presented that city with a tract of 300 acres in the Riverside region, at the western terminus of Pershing road, to be used for a Zoological garden. In making her gift, Mrs. McCormick, whose opportunities have been great for knowing the best the world affords, expressed an interest in the Hamburg type of zoo.

President Peter Reinberg, in accepting the gift for the people, in the name of the Forest Preserve District of Cook County, immediately made research as to the management of different zoos in this county. He also called a committee of prominent citizens, on which were represented members of the Chicago Plan Commission, the Field Museum, and others interested in art, science, and civic recreation. The result is the organization of the Chicago Zoological Society, a representative body of citizens, who in co-operation with the Chicago Zoological gardens committee of the Forest Preserve, will direct the destinies of the Chicago zoo.

Like Hamburg Zoological Gardens The chief feature of the Hamburg Zoological Gardens—created in their present state by Carl Hagenback and his father—has been the magnificent panorama to be seen from one point of view. By a skillful arrangement of landscape features, one could stand in one spot and see spread around him in every direction the lairs of all manners of wild and beautiful creatures, apparently without any intervening bars. The animals were confined by a shelving arrangement of rocks, invisible to the spectator, but effective for its purpose.

In this way artists and nature lovers were enabled to see lions walking at large or leaping from ledge to ledge in a rockwalled ravine; chamois and wild goats on high cliffs akin to their native mountains; tigers prowling in stony pits or amid tropical verdure; reindeer on high plateaus; Polar bears in rock backgrounds with ample bathing space; wild horses in runs, deer in parks. The smaller animals and the birds were likewise taken care of appropriately, and there were also great aquaria, partridge preserves, turtle pastures, insect houses, and the like adapted to scenic effect and scientific study.

Carl Hagenback, the world's greatest collector of wild animals, whose exhibitions have been recognized for their educational value by the Diploma of the French Academy, was the acknowledged leader in all matters pertaining to the handling of animals throughout the world. In fact he practically supplied the animals for the zoos of different countries. His name has naturally been mentioned in connection with the acquisition of animals for the Chicago zoo.

Forest Preserve Adds to Acreage Since the acquisition of the tract given by Mrs. McCormick, the Forest Preserve Commissioners have added thirty acres, making 330 acres in all. The land lies between the Desplaines river and Salt Creek and is already pleasantly diversified between woodland and meadow. It would be easy to create lagoons for wading birds, and in fact make a portion of it a reserve for native birds and animals, where they may be protected, just as the bison have been protected and the species preserved in Bronx Park, New York. Fish can also be introduced in natural basins, as well as shown in aquaria. In short, the zoo is capable of becoming a great Museum of Natural History, with the difference that the animals instead of being stuffed will be alive.

The Chicago Zoological Subcommittee of the Forest Preserve District appointed originally by Mr. Reinberg to look into the management of the chief zoos of America, reported that the New York Zoological Society of the Bronx has 3,450 specimens of animals. Their visitors during the last ten years have totaled over 26 million persons. The Washington zoo while not so large, is beautifully laid out, with naturalistic treatment of the animals' habitats. Cincinnati, and St. Louis also have zoos. The zoo in Lincoln Park, Chicago, is among the ranking zoos in the country, being especially commendable for the cleanly and artistic arrangements for animal life, its leading animal house being considered by zoologists the best in the world. The members of this Zoological committee are Frank J. Wilson, Chairman, William H. MacLean, George A. Miller, Daniel Ryan, Emmett Whelan and Dudley Pierson, with Joseph Dillabough as committee secretary.

Chicago is growing so rapidly that the Lincoln Park zoo, thirteen acres in extent, cannot long be expected to satisfy the recreational purposes of our vast population. Just as the park and boulevard system of Chicago was laid out in advance of the city's actual growth, so this outer park belt is expected to provide for the needs of the future. Already automobiles and street cars can approach very near to the site of the proposed zoo, which is also reached by the Burlington railroad. The ideal approach will be through Pershing road (39th street) when that great boulevard shall have been completed.

Ancient Zoological Gardens It is an interesting fact that all the great nations of the world have, at some period of their careers, established zoological gardens of greater or less extent.

China, by some regarded as the seat of civilization among the ancients, had a famous zoo, in 100 B. C., called by its founder, the Emperor Shou. "Intelligence Park," and which appeared to have an educational and scientific aspect. Egypt has from earliest recorded times, had certain animals kept in captivity, and even at present day has a marvelous well ordered zoo at Gizeh, with lesser ones at Cairo and Khartoum. Among the Greeks and Romans in imperial times it was customary, in addition to the animals kept for gladiatorial combat in the arena, to maintain menageries, aviaries and aquaria for the amusement and benefit of the people. Those who have seen the great aquaria at Naples will appreciate how great an adjunct they are to the city's attraction, rivaling even the renowned art museum.

The gardens of the Zoological Society of London in Regent's Park are famous the world over, despite the fact that they occupy the comparatively contracted space of thirty-five acres. In point of rarity of the specimens the London Zoo has long been the finest in existence. The Society itself is famous for its stately volumes containing the results of the scientific research made possible by the zoo.

In Paris the small zoo in the Jardin des Plantes, founded in 1793, is under the control of the Museum authorities and is open free to the public. The Jardin d'Acclimation in the Bois de Boulogne, is, however, conducted by a private company that demands a fee. Berlin has long boasted a zoo of some pretension, but it belonged likewise to a private corporation; and was a money-making affair.

Chicago is not without native hunters of prowess from whom may be expected contributions to the zoo. From the time of the announcement of Mrs. McCormick's gift, interest was manifested especially by the Adventurer's Club, of which Theodore Roosevelt was a member.

On the purely scientific side, Chicago can contribute the matchless opportunity for study of the animals which the zoo will assemble through the facilities of the Field Museum of Natural History. Many of the professors are deeply interested in the zoo project, which really supplements and fulfills the purpose of the Museum in a popular way.

Corporation Like Art Institute The committee having the project in hand are desirous that it shall truly be an enterprise "of the people, for the people and by the people." To this end a plan of incorporation similar to the one which has already proved so successful at the Art Institute, is contemplated, and the broadest representation of Chicago citizenry is sought.

From the viewpoint of art, Chicago is well-fitted to carry out the great project of the zoo, having already inaugurated and partly put into effect the "City Beautiful" plan, which was among the most extensive of civic improvements ever undertaken. C. H. Wacker, of the Chicago Plan Commission; Charles L. Hutchinson, president of the Art Institute; Judson F. Stone, B. S. Sunny, Col. Robert R. McCormick, and other civic leaders are on the committee having in hand the final organization of the Chicago Zoological Society.

The country at large is watching with interest the development of the Chicago zoo, and it is judged by the widespread publicity that has been given it, it will add to Chicago's prestige throughout America and Europe—in fact in all the far places of the earth which will be called upon to contribute their quota to Chicago's mill, manufacturing paper from pulp, an ink factory, showing every step in the making of ink, under the direction of the National Association of Ink Manufacturers. The visitors will see halftones and cuts made; linotype machines turning out the type that make the big newspapers of the country. In fact, a daily paper will be printed right on the spot; the stories will be written in the Coliseum, copy rushed to the linotype machines, and the type taken to the form where the makeup man will "makeup" the pages. Advertisements will be written and set up. There will be a full fledged composing room. Every step that is taken in the production of a newspaper will be shown. Every device that is used in the printing business will be in operation. There will be binding and cutting machines, electrotyping and all the work that is done in the production of high grade magazines and the last word in printing and typography will be set before the visitor's eye. The exposition will be purely educational. There is to be no charge, but no one will be admitted without an invitation.

"PRINTER" HARDING TO OPEN GRAPHIC ARTS SHOW

The exposition, the first of its kind to be held on a large scale, is to be conducted by the Chicago Club of Printing House Craftsmen. William R. Goodheart, president of the club, is chairman of the executive committee having the exposition and convention in charge. The sessions of the convention, which will bring delegates from all parts of the country, will open July 25 in the Coliseum auditorium, two days after the opening of the exposition. There are thirty clubs of printing craftsmen similar to the Chicago club. All of these will be represented. Five thousand delegates are expected at the convention. The clubs are composed of executives of the printing houses of the country.

Mrs. William R. Goodheart is the chairman of the Ladies Auxiliary, which will have charge of the entertainment program.
