"The Truth"

Is there such a thing as an innocent lie? Are some lies harmless? Does it pay to make any sort of a compromise with the truth?
 Beck Warder was one of those women, who, brought up in an atmosphere of artificialities, grew up with the idea that telling the truth was an extremely uninviting procedure. Accordingly, she spun from the glistening strands of her imagination little white lies that sped forth harmlessly into her world.
 But when she did tell the truth no one believed her. Don't miss this most absorbing photoplay.

"Moonlight and Honeysuckle"

Judith Baldwin had two wealthy suitors, but even moonlight and honeysuckle had no power to inspire love in her heart for either of them. It took Ted McKenzie, a back-slash son of the cattle country, to decide the question in her mind, "what is life without love." However, Ted was a man worthy of such a devotion.
