MAKE-MONEY IN PRODUCING BEEF

Herd of Good Cows and Purebred Sire of Prime Importance in Making Start.

SELECT BEST HEIFER CALVES

No Method Adapted to All Farms and Conditions as Much Depends on Pasture Available and Nearness of Market.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)
We are a nation of meat eaters. The average American eats more than 140 pounds of this concentrated food each year. The importance of meat, particularly beef, is nowhere more emphatically brought out than at the great central stockyards, some of which cover nearly a square mile of ground. To keep the supply of animals moving through these yards necessary to feed the millions of people, requires the raising of cattle, hogs, and sheep on hundreds of thousands of farms and ranches.

Improve Each Generation. In profitable beef production a herd of good cows and a good purebred bull are of great importance. Each generation of cattle raised should be better than the preceding one. This can be accomplished by selecting the best heifer calves each year to take the place of barren, shy-breeding, and old cows, and buying a better bull each two or three years. All other calves produced may be sold either as weanlings at six or eight months old as stockers or feeders at one or two years, finished as baby beef at sixteen to twenty months, or as fat steers at an older age. The system employed depends largely upon the pasture and feed available, transportation costs, and the market price of milk and cattle.

The systems of handling beef breeding herds which are most extensively practiced are "baby beef" and "dual purpose." In the first two systems calves run with their dams until weaned, the cows not being milked. They differ in that cows intended for producing calves for baby beef generally receive better care because their calves are to be fattened shortly after weaning, which makes it necessary to give them a good start on milk.

The straight beef system is primarily adapted to the range country of the West and South, which is too rough, dry, or sandy for cultivation. Where the climate permits, pasture is depended on the year round. Some cotton-topped cake may be used during unusually bad weather or periods of food shortage. Where snow covers the range a part of the year, hay is put up for winter feeding. Little grain is fed, except where grain sorghums can be grown. From southern ranges the cattle are usually sold as stockers at every age from weaning time to maturity. Recently many fat calves have been going to the slaughterhouses from the North and West a large part of the cattle go to market grass-fat as three-year-olds.

Baby beef production is a highly specialized business and is adapted to regions where there is a plentiful supply of fattening feeds together with good pasture for the summer maintenance of the breeding herd and nursing calves. The corn belt is the best place for this system, but it is practiced to some extent in other places.

When to Finish Baby Beef. If spring calves are to be finished as baby beefs, they should be taught to eat grain before they are weaned. They should go into the dry lot at the end of the pasture season and be ready for market by June or July. If possible they should have good pasture for a couple of weeks after weaning. Fall-born calves should be kept on grain when they are turned on pasture in the spring. The quantity of grain should be gradually increased throughout the summer and fall so that they will be finished for market in December or January. When the pasture falls, hay and silage should be supplied. Stocker calves require some meal or grain during their first winter to keep them thrifty and growing. They can utilize to advantage much more roughage, such as stalk fields, meadows, silage, and straw than baby beefs. As yearlings and two-year-olds they may be wintered on roughage alone, some clover or alfalfa hay being given if available.

Amber

Amber is a fossil resin, arising from the exudation of coniferous trees, as is shown by its composition and physical properties, by its occurring in drops and globular masses, which resemble the resin seen exuding from the bark of pine trees, and by its common association with fossil woods. It is of a clear brownish-yellow color, varying in shade, and is often clouded with irregular streaks. It is usually transparent and brittle, and burns readily, giving off dense fumes.

Fastidious Bears. Bears, especially those of the white species, are rather fastidious about their toilets. They are said to comb their hair with their curved claw, and flak themselves to make their hair shine.

Green Cloud Over Coral Island. It would be difficult for sailors to locate the low-lying coral islands, or atolls, of the Pacific but for the fact that over each of them there generally hangs a cloud of a characteristic green hue. After one of these green "atoll clouds" has been seen, the phenomenon is always easily recognized. The cloud is due to moisture evaporated from the warm water of the shallow lagoon. The smooth surface of the lagoon acts as a mirror and throws a greenish reflection on the cloud.

Mirrors on Doors. Walls hung with figured paper welcome mirrors. Doors also afford an opportunity to combine decorative effect with practical utility, not only in the bedroom or dressing room, but in all other parts of the house, especially the hall and dining room. Dividing the glass into small panels or panes, like a window, gives it a decorative quality which may be enhanced by hanging at either side draperies of rich color and texture.

True to His Nature. "I has noticed," said Uncle Eben, "dat de man who got his wealth by running a crooked policy game is de one dat's most anxious to put on airs about how much money he's got."

Sharing With Others. What we share with others is that which enriches both giver and recipient. The richest man is the man who knows how to endure adversity as well as prosperity. He is the one who knows contentment. It is he who anticipates himself to inevitable conditions. One's knowledge may be shared, others may profit by that which is mental possessions. One's only wealth include large measures of faith, service should be given gladly and unselfishly. Exchange.
