THE BOHEMIAN GIRL

The guard is called Arline is arrested and the crowd dispersed by the soldiers. The supposed thief, Arline, is brought before the Count Arheim. Fure-tein pressing the charges causes Count Arheim to believe that Arline has stolen the medalion. But just when the case against Arline appears strongest, the Count perceives on Arline's arm the mark left by the wound inflicted by the deer. The Count then recognizes his long lost child.

Arline is restored to her rank and the home of her father; but the change in her prospect does not diminish her love for Thaddeus. He, during all dangers, seeks and finds her in the castle of her father. He comes to bid her farewell and prays that she will, even when surrounded by other admirers, give a thought to him who saved her life and who loves her.

What she tells him and what she does, well, it would be quite natural for an American girl to come with such circumstances, left in Austria they do things differently, some in the past years and some in how the Bohemian girl solves the puzzle.

Monday afternoon at two thirty a children's matinee will be given for children only. Monday evening at 8 as well as Tuesday evening at the same hour, performances will be given. All performances will be at the high school auditorium.
