9.02 Letter, from Walter Biehn to Esquesing Historical Society, November 08, 2002, relating memories of his time in Georgetown. (3 handwritten pages)

Dear Stephen,

Reading the current newsletter of the EHS today, recalls many happy years in my "adopted" home town of Georgetown.

Some of your EHS older members like Dawn, Karen, Doug and Marj will tell you that I spent many years as publisher and editor, first as owner, then as publisher for Thomson Newspapers at the now defunct Georgetown Herald. It was interesting to be associated, at first, with a rather rundown weekly whose former publisher was more interested in printing than in a newspaper. (There had never been any editorials until I took over as owner in 1940) and not intending to brag, I think I improved the Herald over my years, first as owner, as I said, and made it a vital force in the town. That wouldn't apply today, of course, but at that time a small town had its own character, and people had a loyalty, the type that Sinclair Lewis described in his novel "Main Street". Post war progress lessened the fierce loyalty to Georgetown, and the intense rivalry (particularly with Acton in hockey).

It was a wonderful time to be associated with a small town in such an intimate way, as publisher and editor, something not possible today, when a small town newspaper had its own printing press, ground out the weekly edition, in our case, Wednesday at 5:00 p.m., though often delayed an hour or two because of the eccentricities of our antiquated flatbed [Cardbell] press. Lucky no safety inspector was on hand to see us stop the press by grabbing the wheel. My memories could tell of the day the four-page form was not properly leveled on the press. It started, and the form fell off, and the pages disintegrated. Foreman 'Mac' McGilvray displayed his patience as he put together the pages again, and we got back to printing. Those were wonderful day with our small staff - Mac, Les Clark, Reg Broomhead, and a number of apprentices like Harold Davison and Bruce Collins, to name a couple. Managing somehow, we turned out the paper and quantities of letterheads, envelopes, etc., etc. with limited equipment but a wonderful staff which eventually included Dave Hastings and Myles Gilson.

Sad to think that its' now all history - no more Herald, no more printing business, just memories of what used to be when each Ontario small town had its own locally-owned weekly newspaper, including my home town of Chesley, in Bruce County, which gave me the inspiration to aspire to own a similar business. Choosing Georgetown was a good move - a progressive town, a business which grew, and, luckily, one which drew the attention of newspaper great, Thompson, which eventually I sold to - business and myself.

Seems now like horse and buggy days when local ownership of a small town weeklies is rare.

I deem it a privilege to have been involved in the days when most small town Ontario weeklies were locally owned, publisher-editors lived in the town, knew most of its residents, and often used judgment in self-censoring news which might cause major trouble to an individual or business. Guess it could be called "kindly journalism".

Sincerely, Walter Biehn
