days to attend in this class. So the sisters attended on different days, and each took care of the other's children. One woman took glove making, moccasins and needlepoint, the other leather work and textile printing, and each will teach the other what she learned. The Detlor and L'Amable Institute in North Hastings sent a car to bring a young mother and her children to their course in Cultural Activities.

The same outgoing spirit is shown in the way Institutes are reaching out to other groups in the community. Several branches have brought in members of Farm Forums, and Caradoc Centre Farm Forum took the responsibility of sponsoring a course in Foods and Nutrition when there was no Institute nearby to do this. Roseneath had representatives from a neighboring Indian Homemakers'

Club at their course in Citizenship. At Boxall's course in Effective Speaking there were members of a Farm Women's Club. County librarians have been especially invited to the course in Cultural Activities and no doubt these librarians will be of great help to the women in supplying books for the reading recommended in the course.

Institutes are also giving excellent advance publicity to their extension services through the local press and radio. When Pine Grove in Hastings County had their course in Effective Speaking, they met in a church where they could accommodate a good-sized class, and every day for a week in advance of the course, the local radio broadcast an invitation to every woman in the community, and to neighboring Institutes to come to the course, bringing their lunch with them, and the In-
