

A.G. Deadman, Peter Portsmouth, in 1847; William B<sup>e</sup>gnall, in 1849; A. Bodkin G.W. Dorman, H.C. Garnett, Joseph Howlett, H. Johnstone jr., E. Sparkman and Jacob Weylor, in 1848; R.B. Curling, John Forsyth, J.R. Kilbourn, J.J. Uptigrove, and William S. Uptigrove, in 1844; John Gowanlock, W.D. Hughson, in 1841; R.C. Hammond, in 1842; Francis Jarvis, in 1840; William James, 1832; John Johnstone, Berley Kilbourn, in 1837; H. Rawlings, 1833; A. Seabrook, 1835; E. Willsie, 1836; and John Sutherland in 1820.

Among the first references to the London District--for there was not even the village of London at that time--was an order issued by the representative of George the Third in Canada, in 1810, to the effect that Caleb Hagen was to make an assessment of Delaware and Norris, and receive for his services the enormous sum of £2 10s. Delaware is first mentioned in the transactions of the Quarter Sessions Court, June 14, 1814. Dorchester also finds mention, and the constables of both townships were, Benjamin Schram, John Heath, and Gilbert Harris. On December 26, 1814, officers were appointed for Delaware Township as follows:--George Reynolds, clerk; Adolphus Bostwick and Arch. McMillan, assessors; Sylvenus Reynolds, collector; Gideon Tiffany, Nathan Fairchild and William Schram, overseers of roads; John Dingman, town warden; John Odell, constable; and James Choat, pound-keeper.

In June, 1815, Joseph Flanagan was appointed constable of Delaware, and Timothy Kilbourn, of Dorchester and Westminster.