

Allan Poechman.

V2-23

Barn.
Renovations
1963.
Allan & Son
Terry.

HAS NARROW ESCAPE FROM UNUSED WELL

Mr. Linus Poechman of the South Line, Brant, had a narrow escape while ploughing the garden plot of his farm with a tractor on Friday morning of last week. While turning over the furrows, he suddenly felt the wheel pulling to the side, and thinking he had caught the root of a tree got off to investigate. Mr. Poechman was astounded when he discovered that instead of snagging on a root his tractor had crashed through the top of an old abandoned well, leaving a hole four feet in diameter into the well which is thirty feet in depth. This well must have been dug in the eighteenth century and was left with only a plank covering about two feet below the surface. It was a narrow escape for the agrarian and the incident could easily have been attended by more serious results.

