Highland Lassie

On Sunday, dressed in one of her highland dance costumes, 12 year-old Eva King of Warton said she was not excited about a trip to the United States where she will compete in the biggest highland dance festival in North America. "I'm just not letting myself get excited," she said before posing for the camera.

Eva and her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Art King, left Monday with the Owen Sound Highland Dance Company for a two-week trip that will see them perform at Disneyland and then aboard the Queen Mary before they compete at Santa Rosa, a highland festival.

Organizer and teacher Sheila Milne said the Company has been preparing for the trip since Christmas.

They will perform at Disneyland today and aboard the Queen Mary Thursday. On the way they will do some sightseeing.

On September 1, 2, and 3 the troupe will perform and compete in the Pacific Highland Championships at Santa Rosa.

People come from all over the states, Canada and Britain to compete.

Disneyland is paying for part of the trip, but because they are also dancing in the competition, they had to raise money themselves.
