

This picture was one of several shown to The Gazette of birds entangled in the nets placed by naturalists to facilitate the banding of birds. Residents say the nets are not properly manned and some birds like the one in the background die and others like the one in the foreground struggle until they are seriously injured. The pictures were all taken in the Wildlife Sanctuary within recent weeks.

This is a view of Picton's Main St., and the Norman Block before the hydro poles were removed in the horse and buggy days.
