The 166-year-old Trinity Anglican Church in Colborne was deconsecrated this week in a rite conducted by Bishop Linda Nicholls of the Diocese of Toronto. The ceremony means the edifice is no longer a place of Anglican worship. A view from the loft shows the altar as it was at the time of its final service in April 2012. The photo at right, taken from the same vantage point at the June 12 deconsecration service, shows the brass altar rail, choir pews and railing, bishop's chair, two server chairs and wall hangings gone.
