This is the tenth anniversary for the team, during which time the team has raised more than $2 million for cancer research. Making this year's 17-day ride with stops at 50 schools extra special was the recent announcement by the Canadian Cancer Society that it had established a $1-million impact grant in Pedal for Hope's name to fund research at the Hospital for Sick Children.

There Dr. Lillian Sung is developing a child-friendly tool that will help young people who are ill talk about their symptoms in order to provide them with better treatment and to improve their quality of life.

To "get them better faster," Staff Sergeant Marc Habgood of the Peterborough-Lakefield CPS told the students.

Aidan Sherwin led all student fund raisers, collecting $185 in memory of his great-grandfather who died of cancer recently. Leevye Strode was next with $100. The total raised, including T-shirt sales by the teachers, was $995.

The officers also deliver an anti-bullying message to students, which is also designed to build a relationship between police and youth, Habgood said afterwards.

The ride began April 24 in Peterborough and will end there May 17. Last week the Pedal for Hope team visited schools in Brighton, Campbellford, Warkworth, Hastings and Castleton as it wound its way through Northumberland.
