Toronto Choir to perform fundraising concert

News - Warkworth - A renowned men's choir is coming to the village of Warkworth to perform a fundraising concert in support of Campbellford Memorial Hospital.

Now in its 18th season, Forte - The Toronto Men's Chorus, is comprised of members drawn mostly from the city's talented and diverse gay community.

On Saturday, June 13, "Forte" will present "My Story/My Song" at St. Andrew's Church in Warkworth. Funds raised will support the purchase of high priority equipment that will enhance patient care at the hospital.

"My Story/My Song" will feature a wide array of songs, each of which has a significant meaning to members of the chorus.

"We are thrilled to be coming to Warkworth to present this new show in support of the hospital that means so much to everyone in the community," said Dr. Stuart Watson, Forte Choir member.

Show-only tickets are $40 and are available at Metaphorhome and Eclectic Mix in Warkworth, the CMH Foundation office and on-line at <www.givetocmh.ca>.

The fundraiser also features a special $75 Premium ticket that includes an after-show reception at the Warkworth home of Robert Gage. The reception will give guests a chance to mingle with the choir, while enjoying refreshments and appetizers made by local chef Tina Moorey of On The Side Gourmet Catering.

"Having Forte perform in this area is a real coup," said John Russell, executive director, CMH Foundation.

"They are an extremely talented group and we are honoured they have chosen to support the hospital with this show. The choir is showing tremendous philanthropic spirit by not charging a performance fee."

"We are also honoured that Robert Gage has agreed to open his lovely home and garden to host the special After-Show Reception," Russell added.

Deputy-mayor raises concern about a "dangerous dog" in the township

By John Campbell

News - Cramahe Township - There's a dog that's considered dangerous in the township and Deputy-mayor Sandra Arthur says the municipality needs to take action.

"Something has to happen real quick," she said, in bringing up the matter at council's April 21 meeting.

Director of operations Dan O'Brien said he had asked by law enforcement officer Holly Cole to "follow up" the deputy-mayor's concerns, adding later: "We're still having challenges with that situation so we're in the process of investigating our legal avenues to stop that problem."

CAO Christie Alexander said the dog was deemed dangerous after it attacked another dog and the municipality had taken steps "to protect the public."

Mayor Marc Coombs said

there's a process council follows in which members of the public are asked to sit on a committee to deal with the situation. "It's almost like a hearing," he said.

"The dog was deemed to be dangerous," and a number of conditions were set that its owner had to follow, such as fencing the property.

However, the dog is still seen on the loose "occasionally," he said, and it is "attacking again," cause the dog is doing its duty but it's doing it off the property, which is the problem," he said.

"It's a very challenging situation legally," O'Brien said. "We're doing everything we can to stop the danger to the pub-

Arthur said she hears "quite often" from residents who live near where the dog is kept. They're concerned because they have small children who ride their bikes and walk in the area. "Something has to happen or someone is going to get hurt and it's going to come back on us," she said.

Arthur added.

Coombs said the "unusual" problem first came to light more than a year ago.

Councillor Ed Van Egmond said the dog is a breed used to guard livestock.

"That's probably why they're lic."
