

Days of confusion and grief followed the fire. Many had no home and there were so many bodies and no coffins. Many bodies were so badly burned they were never identified.

But after a time people began to rally. The government sent in lumber and building materials to re-build. Different organizations provided clothing and food for those who remained.

Women Institute helped to distribute clothing and supplies.