Moose returned

It took 2 1/4 hours, four tranquilizer darts and a full nelson from a wildlife officer on Tuesday to subdue a 500-pound cabbage-eating moose and send her back to the wilderness.

About an hour later, another female moose was rounded up in a stand of trees at Canadian Forces Base Edmonton. Both were later released about 20 kilometres northeast of the city.

"I imagine they're going to be stiff and have a bit of a headache," wildlife officer Allan Farrants said after the encounter with a moose named Molly. "They won't want to do that again."

The saga began Sunday night when wildlife officers corralled the moose in a stand of trees.
