

1892.

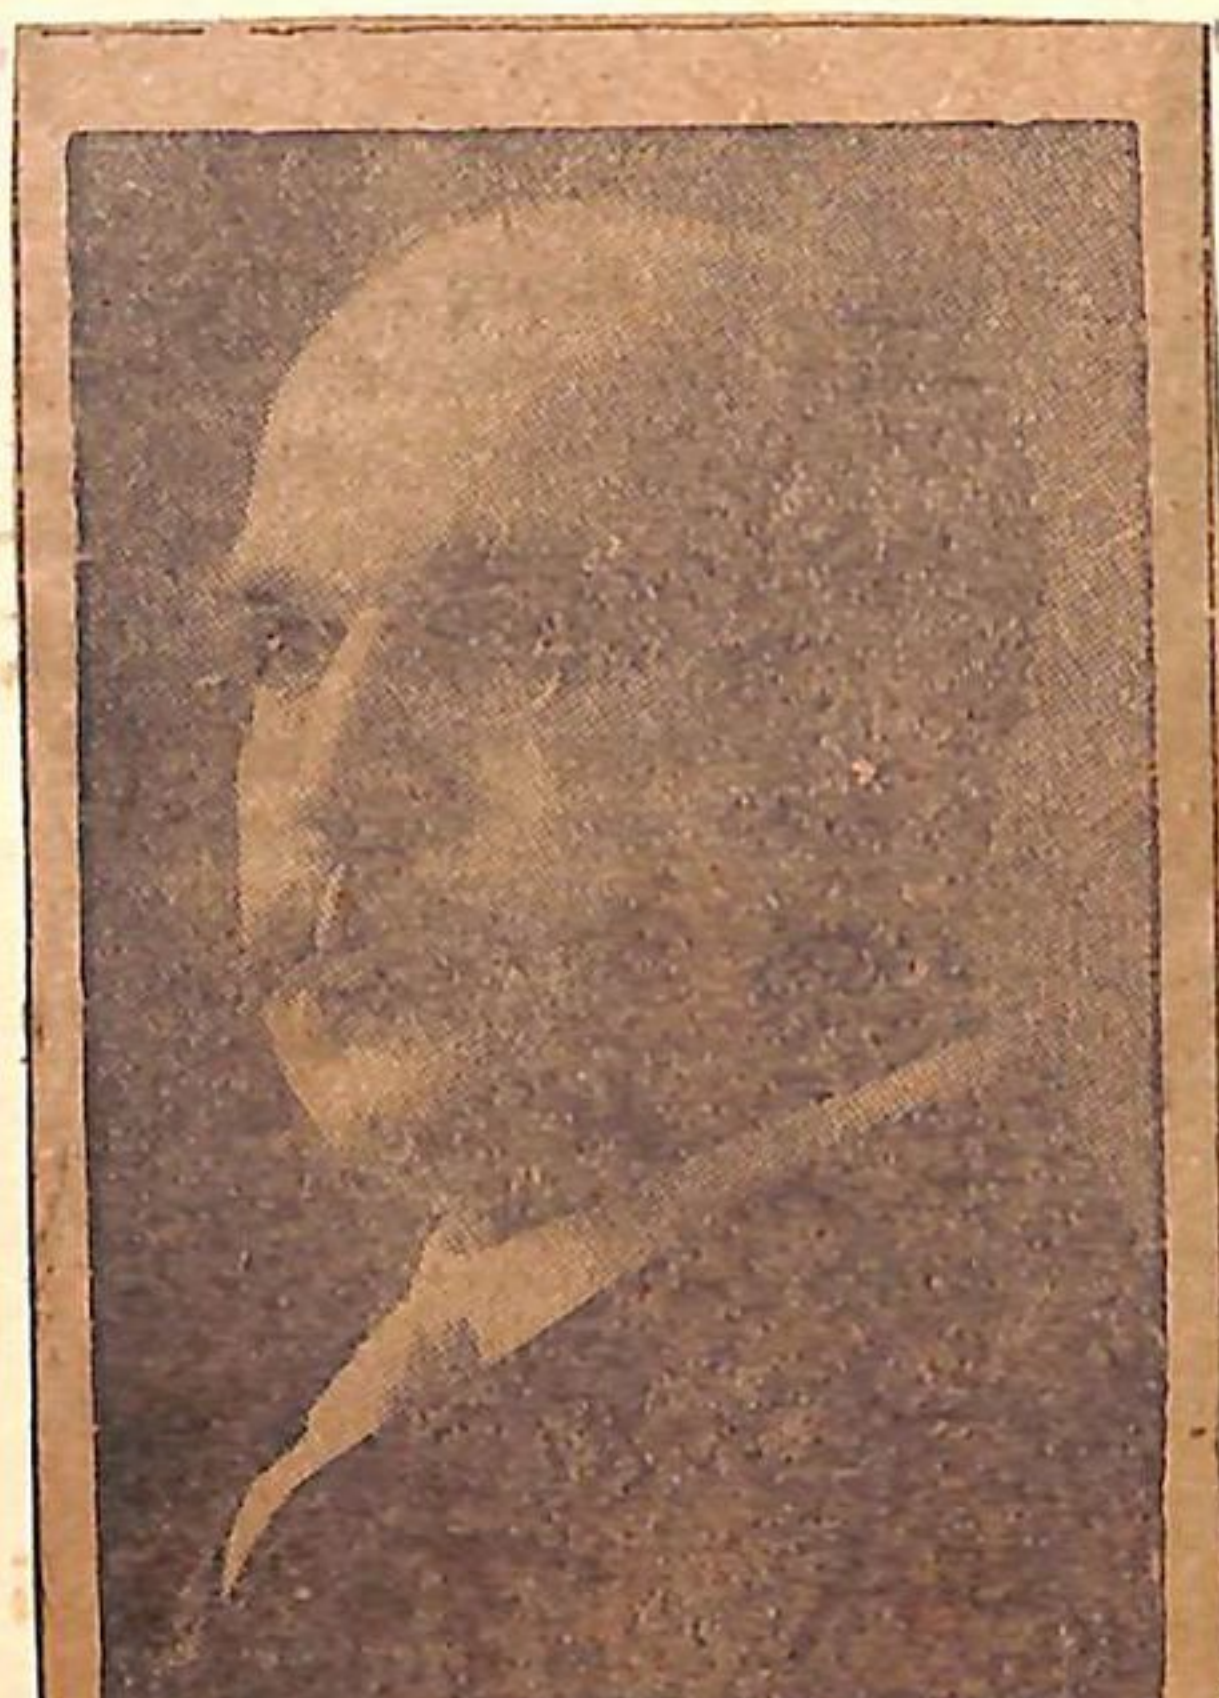

JOHN WHITE & CO.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 24TH, 1890.

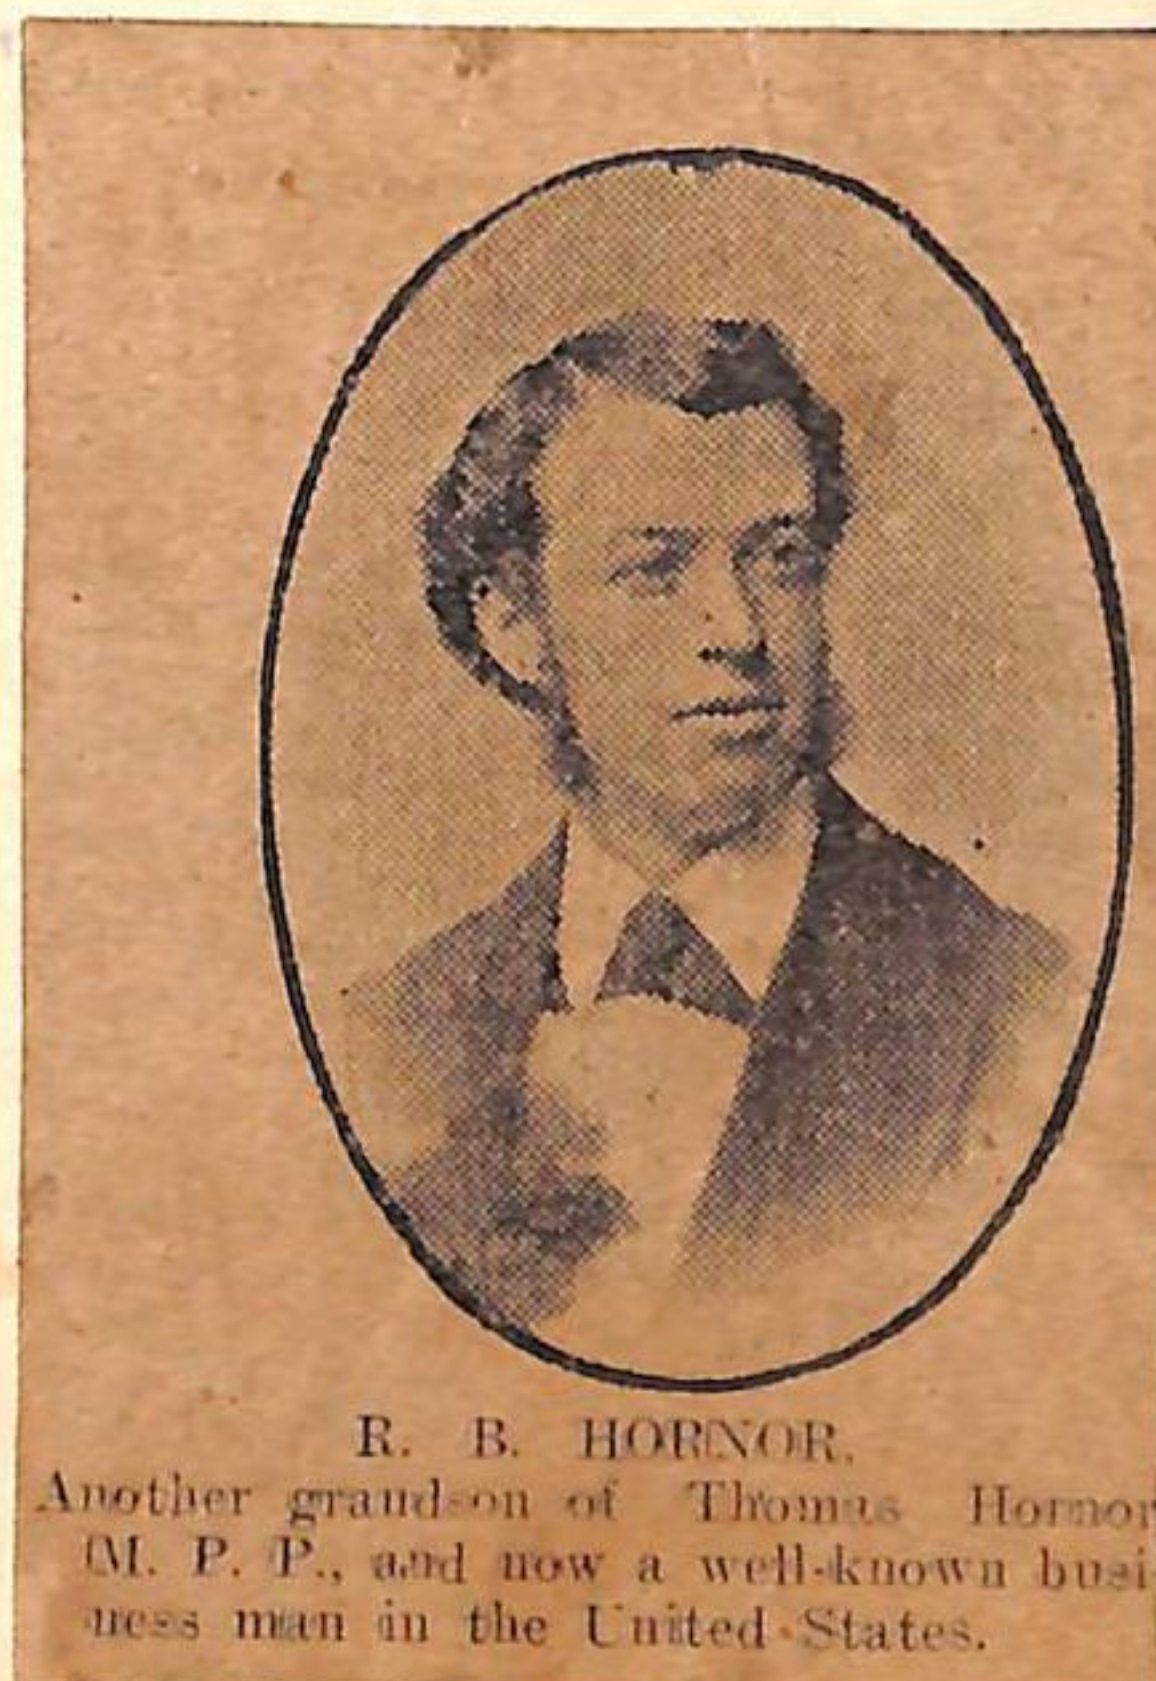

Tomorrow, Thursday, our opening day. Splendid exhibition of Mantles and Millinery. Golden days will begin tomorrow morning. Bountiful harvests gathered and garnered, the approach of the indian summer, the coming back home of those who have been absent for summer recreation, make the autumn the Golden Days of the year. Additional interest centres at this period with the advent of such new merchandise as the needs of the season and the active researches of our buyers bring together, from points near and far, in this and other lands. It is, therefore, quite proper that our September occasion for this year should be called GOLDEN DAYS. In a manifold sense they are to be Golden Days. The store is made very attractive by combining the new goods and the sentiment of the season, myth, fable and ancient custom—the fruits of field, orchard and garden—flowers wild and cultivated, have been brought into close harmony with silks and hangings for your gratification. The color of the store is golden. Tomorrow, Thursday, grand opening of our Millinery, and Mantle Show Rooms for the fall season of 1890. J. White & Co.
