W. H. THURSTON.

AU REVOIR 1889.

Another scene in the great drama of the world is about completed, and the curtain will drop behind the footlights on Tuesday night next.

To any person who views the past year in retrospect it will impress him with its import, for a remarkable year it has been in many respects. Hurricane, fire, flood and wreck have been busy reaping humanity with deadly scythes.

To cap the climax of the year an event has lately transpired which is of world-wide importance, and marks with emphasis the march of nations on our own continent.

During the past year, too, many important personages have passed from off the world's stage, never more to return.

On the other hand the world has never known a year of greater progress in art, science, exploration, commerce, and peace.

Such is a short picture of the world's history during the past year, and as the cycle of the year passes away the white-winged bird of peace perches upon Britain's banners wherever they stand furlled.
