Feversham News.

From our own Correspondent.
The weather is unusually warm, so you will not expect to hear very much this week. However, I will try to note down a few of the current items of interest.

Another farmers' meeting was held last Friday evening to discuss roller mill matters. Nothing definite has been done yet.

The Osprey Agricultural Society met in Feversham on Saturday the 28th inst. The directors decided to hold the next annual fair in this village.

Pa Brown disposed of his trotter, Sweepstakes, recently, for a more speedy one, Dexter. Dexter is a more fashionable horse, and we think he will suit too well to part with. He will be an ornament to the race course. Pa still reigns supreme in the McGirr house. We have no celebrations here on the first or twelfth, and we are led to believe that that accounts for it.

A statue ought to be passed in Feversham doing away with all cruelty to dumb animals. What is the place to come to, when great professing christians will torture a poor dumb animal. We have a striking example of the above in Feversham at the present time, and we think that in all justice to the poor animal the guilty party should be punished.

Miss Emma Mullin, teacher on the Twelfth, is having a school picnic this (Monday) afternoon, good time is expected. That will be a good chance for Johnny.

Miss Carrie Buckingham, the popular teacher of No. 5, is holding a school picnic on Friday the 4th of July. This picnic will constitute the closing exercises of her school. Let every body attend, as an excellent time may be expected.

Rev. Mr. Chisholm preached on this circuit last Sunday. We are glad to meet with our past minister at any time.

Mr. Geo. Whiteoak is doing a good business at the butchering at present. He is the man to buy from.

Don't forget the farmers meeting next Friday evening. The canvassing committee will then report.

Mr. Editor, please give my best respects to Zip when you see him.
McCarthy.

The Perils of Quicksands.

A remarkable example of the dangers of working in quicksands occurred recently at Woodside, N. Y. An intelligent man, Mr. James H. Parsells, undertook to build a well near his house. The well was 15 feet deep in the centre of a quicksand. Mr. Parsells went into the well to repair a pipe when the sides caved in, partly burying him. When he was discovered, his head and part of his body were still above the sand, which was slowly pressing around him. He did not seem to be much injured, for he was cool and self-possessed, and with a calm voice himself directed the excited villagers, who were eager to rescue him.

Steven and John Parsells, aged fourteen and nineteen, worked desperately to save their father's life. Dozens of men with shovels worked around the well, while others fastened ropes under Mr. Parsell's arms. Ten men pulled on the rope from the second story of the new house, until deep ridges were made by the rope in the window sill, but all the efforts to pull out the man failed, and the sand packed itself more solidly around his form. It continued to rise, stealing up over his shoulders and about his head. Stimulants were given to the doomed man, and a rubber tube was placed in his mouth to supply him with air.

Meanwhile the rescuing party fought the deadly sands desperately. They could not dislodge the body from the tenacious grip of the sands. Then the sands rose quickly, bubbling up like the waters of a spring. They surrounded the man's head and covered him entirely. John Parsells stood at his father's head, and with a shovel worked furiously for nearly two hours. Three times he succeeded in clearing the sands from his father's head, but they rapidly covered it again, being forced up, no doubt, by the crowds which pressed closely about the well. Trenches were dug at the sides of the well, in the hope that the man might be extricated in that way, but they were quickly refilled.

After working for a long time the rescuers succeeded in dragging out the body, but when the sands had closed over Mr. Parsell's head the air-tube fell from his mouth and he was suffocated.
Mr. Parsells was one of the oldest and most respected of the citizens of his village. He leaves a wife and six children.
