HEALTH FOR ALL.

Prohibition. From hearts and homes now blasted, From countless thousands slain There comes a cry of anguish, Of sore distress and pain. Through alcoholic poisons In tempting mixtures sold, More harm is wrought amongst us Than ever hath been told.

From many a sunless hovel, From many a garret bare Ascends the wail of mortals Who languish in despair. Strong drink hath wrecked the husband, The father's love hath slain, Of peace, and joy, and comfort, No vestige doth remain.

Where mothers' hearts are breaking,— Where children cry for bread— Where home's dear charms have perished And hope's sweet voice has fled. Where life is slowly ebbing From hearts once bright and gay, We hear the cry: "Oh Christians, Arise this plague to stay!"

And shall the broken-hearted To us appeal in vain? Shall we do nought to help them To break this awful chain? We, who are taught of Jesus For all mankind to feel, Shall we not make some effort This social wound to heal?

Oh, ye who love the Saviour, And ye who preach God's word, In heaven's high name we charge you, Let all the truth be heard. Unmask this dreadful system, Your ablest powers apply, Till all the nations echo The prohibition cry.

Till like Sennachrib's army Slain by the midnight blast, Strong drink, with all its evils Is reckoned with the past; Till those who now are mourning, Through drear and dismal days, Shall sing aloud in triumph The Lord Jehovah's praise.
