A Flesherton Boy Abroad.

BY E. K. RICHARDSON.

The passage through the Straits of Belle Isle, between Labrador and Newfoundland, introduces the eastward bound voyager to the free and boundless ocean, so often the inspiring theme of poets.

The dawn of July the 12th found us out of sight of land, with the temperature very markedly lower. There was nothing except the almanac to indicate that the day was the anniversary of an event of any great importance to English speaking people.

We listened in vain for the deep roll of the drum and merry trill of the fife, and no orange and blue nor gay lilies and flags were to be seen; but there were indications that something special was expected. Everybody from stem to stern seemed to have made their toilet with a little more than usual care, and came on deck wearing an air of propriety and restfulness, befitting the occasion. It was Sunday,—here and there were little groups chatting and smoking, and up and down the upper deck the cabin passengers industriously walked, trying to fight off the seasickness, while on a bundle of hay two old gentlemen sat, the one with dogmatic frown reading and commenting on the Bible, while the other with peaceful, gentle expression listened without disputing. Thus the morning wore away till church time without interruption, except the mustering of the ship's crew, each man beside the lifeboat to which he belonged. At eleven in the morning and seven in the evening public worship was held in the cabin dining-saloon, with a heartiness that betokened the good feeling that reigned.

At night there was a change; a storm arose, and about three in the morning a great wave struck the ship, woke us all up, sent the cattle sprawling and bellowing, then scuttled over the sides and down the scuppers like some mischievous sprite out on a lark. I need not tell how many vacant seats there were around the tables during the three days of nasty weather that followed, nor how very liberal some were in their offerings to the fishes. "Tis better felt than told."

Friday morning we came in sight of the rugged coast and green fields of the Emerald Isle, and all day long the sea was calm as a washbasin, as we coasted past Loch Foyle, Giant's Causeway, Islay Cantire, etc. Evening found us in the Irish sea with a great fleet of herring smacks all about us, and five torpedo boats darting about like faithful watch dogs in a palace yard. At night a concert was held in the dining saloon for the benefit of the Liverpool Sailors' Orphanage. After tea all was eager haste to prepare for the concert. Boot brushes, razors, curling tongs and numerous other toilet articles that had enjoyed a long rest were called into service, and quite a respectable audience gathered for a very pleasing entertainment, consisting of vocal and instrumental music, recitations and speeches. This was followed by a first class supper for the performers, during which many complimentary remarks were made regarding the rare talent aboard, and regrets expressed that another circuit of the clock dial would mark the time of our separating, apparently forever. The acts announced on the program failed to put in an appearance, so the audience had to disperse on foot. There was little promising, such as is customary after a concert on land, and the stewards were spared their usual duty of ordering the ladies below at nine o'clock.

There was yet another object of interest for the few of us who had not retired too soon. About midnight the dim, dark outline of a large vessel was discernible not far ahead; soon we noticed several green fire balls shoot up from their deck and these were answered by a similar fireworks display from ours. After a few minutes signalling both vessels came almost to a dead stop, and in a short time we received from our outgoing neighbor, the SS. Donalton, a pilot to take us over the bar, up the Mersey to our landing pier in Liverpool. By six the next morning all were astir busily preparing to land. Boxes, bundles, baggage of all descriptions were heaped on deck ready to be transferred to the ferryboat with the passengers, and conveyed from our ship, our town, our home for the past ten days, to the landing station near the custom house. While passing this interesting institution many warm hand shakings betokened the warm friendships that were now to end. Ere nightfall we would be scattered up and down throughout England, Ireland and Scotland, some returning to gladden their friends with success achieved in the new land; one poor young fellow to die after a vain attempt to escape consumption; some to meet friends they had never seen before; others to visit places made famous in history as the scenes of those events that immortalize even the meanest haulets. Thus, at most any hour of that day, we might see one or two of our fellow passengers taking train from Lime St. station for all points of the compass, and gradually there settled down over me that loneliness that one feels only in a great strange city.

Mr. Jno. Hutchinson lost a valuable mare a short time ago. The beast while rolling in the pasture rolled into a hole, out of which a large stone had been taken, and when found was almost dead. Mr. Geo. Logan lost a good mare, which is a great draw back to him at this time.

One Mr. Foy talks of putting up a blacksmith shop here. We are all heartily pleased with the project. This is a good opening for blacksmith shop.

Mr. Wm. Hutchinson, the genial postmaster and general merchant, gave us a friendly call on Monday of this week.

Married.

LATIMER—JOHNSTON—At the residence of the bride's father, by Rev. R. Strachan, on May 29th. Mr. James L. Latimer, of Eugenia, to Miss Mary Johnston, eldest daughter of Mr. Thomas Johnston, of Griersville.

Back-Ache.

Back-ache is caused by sick kidneys. Dodd's Kidney Pills will remove it. By their peculiar action on the kidneys, they impart activity and benefit the system by purifying the blood. You cannot have pure blood with disordered kidneys; health's existence depends upon their natural condition; they are the governors of the system, continual disorder results in kidney consumption, which is bright's disease.

The Caledonian Advertiser writes up a glowing obituary on a resident of its town and closes the article by saying: "The deceased has also owed us $2.50 on subscription for about nine years past."
