Hello!

Hello Central!
Hello!
Give me Markdale please?
Hello, is that Markdale?
Yes.

I want to ask if you know that great pump maker there?

O yes, everybody knows Artley, the pump maker, for miles around here.

Is that the fellow who drives the mules?

Yes, he drives a span of mules so people will know him better. When they see the mules they say, there's the noted pump maker coming.

Exactly; we see him driving past here two or three times a week, with pumps, and would like to know where he takes them all to?

Well, you see it is just this way. Artley's pumps have gained an enviable reputation. Where one goes others are sure to follow. They are now scattered through the six townships viz: Euphrasia, Holland, Glenelg, Artemesia, Proton, and Osprey, with a few even beyond that.

Well tell me, why are his pumps so universally praised and admired?

O that is easily explained. You see Artley is a natural genius, as well as a practical mechanic, consequently his pumps are made in a superior workmanlike manner. Some people have an idea that anybody can make a pump. In a sense that may be true. You can make a pump by nailing a few boards together, but it is another thing to make a pump to work easy and be durable.

I notice in last week's paper that he has been making some improvements in his pumps. Can you tell me something about them?

Well, I haven't time to explain it all to you here. You will understand that the head and the cylinder are the two principle parts in a pump. He has made some important improvements in the head which you should see for yourself. He now lines the cylinder of his wood pumps with a brass shell, which makes them a great deal easier to work. They will also last much longer, as the cylinder is generally the first part to give out in a pump. Is there anything more you want to ask?

No, that will do this time. Thanks.
Good bye.
