The Farmer's Garden.

By J. I. GRAHAM

The following essay was given first prize at East Grey fall fair in "The Advance" competition.

This is a subject that is much neglected by many farmers and one that contributes most to the health and comfort of a family for labor and money expended.

The farmer should, and by right ought, to have the best garden of any class of citizens, and he should find the most enjoyment of any class of men in managing and working one, for as he can have suitable room and proper tools, also being a professional tiller of the soil, the dressing and keeping of a garden might be for him only a pleasant task compared with the laborious job of hoeing and weeding too often required to be done in the farmer's garden. The trouble with the farmer's garden has generally been that it is so laid out that it can only be worked by hand, and by the time it is most needed to be done, the farmer is busy with other work in his larger field, when his teams and tools can work to advantage, and so would postpone the disagreeable and slow hand work required to keep the garden in order; and being once neglected, it would rapidly become worse, so that soon it would be a formidable job to put it in proper form again, and instead of the farmer finding the greatest pleasure in attending his garden, he would allow it to become the most disagreeable work on the farm. Now the farmer, by using proper shrewdness and management, can easily remedy all this. The work of the garden may be done so quickly and easily as to insure it being done well and in season.

The first requisite, then, will be to locate well, and this I would do almost regardless of soil, for that can be made to suit the purpose required. It should be situated near the farm house, in plain view from a frequented door or window. Lay off ground of liberal length, and wide enough for two good garden plots. Avoid as far as possible the fencing of them in, though along the farther side from the house and across the rear end, if some boundary is needed, let it be some evergreen hedge-rows. They always look well, and in some cases are very useful as windbreaks for garden protection. Next look to the soil, and if too sandy draw on clay loam to add to it, or if too much inclined to clay, mix with a good quantity of light sand loam. The farmer may always rely on this that a good application of fair soil is quite as valuable any time as a dressing of manure, owing to its chemical effects. If judiciously applied it is often better and more lasting. Only be sure to apply enough of it and manure to make a deep, rich soil. After thorough mixing and working to a fine seed bed, seed down and lay by one half in clover to lie for two years, while the other half is being used for the garden. Then alternate by seeding this down to lie for the other two years, while that which rested under clover is being used in this two years' course of garden rotation. The continued use of a single plot of ground for this purpose will deaden any soil more than manure alone can remedy, but by the change and recuperation gained by being in turf one half of the time the soil is enlivened so as to work in much more friable condition and by applying the manure or fertilizers when seeding down, and especially a heavy coat upon the turf before ploughing again, for a garden the ground will be rich enough and will to a great extent go clear of the cumbersome and formidable stock of weeds which usually have to be accepted as the inevitable in the farmer's garden.

To have the best results the soil should be very rich. To work this garden right, the owner can till it as readily and to nearly as good advantage, with horse and cultivator as he does his corn or potato field. After plowing and fitting to a good seed-bed make drills about 2 1/2 ft. apart for all roots that require a deep soil, such as beets, mangolds, carrots, parsnips, turnips, etc., then by marking the balance with a 2 1/2 or 3 foot marker nearly everything that is to be grown can be planted in these rows. Beans and other plants of smaller growth, plant near together in the row, and tomatoes, corn, potatoes and the like plant farther apart. For cucumbers and other vines requiring more room plant only in every other row. Then with a light fine-tooth cultivator, a horse and a skilful hand will go over an ordinary garden in an hour, and by following this up about once a week, supplementing this tillage with a little hand-work with hoe or garden rake, you will till such a garden quickly and thoroughly, and it will be such a piece of work that the farmer will take pride in. As to having fruit trees to cumber the vegetable garden, I consider them so out of place as not to need mentioning in connection with the garden. As to strawberries, every farmer should have a bed. These could be planted in the same way. As to getting an extra early start with tomatoes, cabbage seed, onions, peppers, and such plants, make a very plain hot-bed to start the plants. For this draw 2 or 3 loads of horse manure, dump and stamp it down about two feet thick in any out-of-the-way corner to the south of some building, with 6 or 8 inches of good soil on top. A beginner should not attempt too much or too many varieties. He can easily increase as his time will permit and taste requires.

On Saturday last a telegram was received here saying: "trading boat Enterprising was found wrecked a short distance from Lion's Head. No one on board." This boat was owned by Mr. R. McAllister, of this place, and used for trading. She was on her return trip from the North Shore and it is feared was capsized in the terrific storm of Friday night. Every effort was made to find out particulars, but up to time of going to press no further news has been received. On Monday, however, word brought over by the "Str. Favorite" that J. McLean, who shipped from here with McAllister, was in Parry Sound jail for stealing money from Mr. McAllister, his trial having taken place in Bying Inlet. So it is surmised that poor McAllister was compelled to return alone, and was overtaken and capsized by the storm. On Monday afternoon Mr. R. Carroll went up to Lion's Head to get any information possible as to the disaster, and take charge of the wreck and contents. Great sympathy is felt for Mrs. McAllister and family in this hour of sorrow and suspense. But little hopes are entertained as to Mr. McAllister's safety, and the general belief is that he was drowned.—Thornbury Herald.

Miss Hieck's Case.

DELTA, Ont., Oct. 23.—Miss Ida I. Hieck, of Parry Sound, is a young lady well-known and highly esteemed in this section of country. It was with much pleasure, therefore, that her friends here read the despatch from Parry Sound, last week, containing the news of her recovery from the nervous prostration and insomnia with which she has been troubled since she had "the grippe" in 1891. Considerable anxiety was felt concerning her, for all considered her case serious. Her recovery being due to the use of Dodd's kidney pills, has added one more valuable testimony to the efficacy of this remedy, which, judged by its good work, may justly be termed the most valuable remedy known to-day.

If the man or woman, will for once long enough cease blaming the stomach, liver or kidneys, and use a medicine containing nerve food, designed to rebuild and re-supply the power which moves these innocent organs to healthy action, they will find they are no longer ailing.
