Markdale.

From our own Correspondent.

Already we are beginning to plan and speculate as to summer holidays and now that the boats are running, our attention is turned lakeward. To appreciate in our anticipation the joys of the water, we first let our thoughts dwell on the dry scorched land with singed grass and withering leaves while an odd flaking cloud no wetter than foam, floats high. Then Oh! to be out on the lake sailing in the breeze with volumes of water all around! But of course, it would spoil the picture to mention rough water and sea-sickness so we will leave that part out.

Mr. W. Turner, druggist, is contemplating an ocean voyage this summer with his brother. They will probably leave some time next month and visit some of the points of interest in Europe.

Now that fishing season has opened, the small boy will arm himself with line and hook and the all-needful bait and will proceed to the place of battlement—But with what delight will the genuine old fisherman trail his line up the river; and I fully believe him when he says that there is skill in fishing, and that it no chance game, for one glance in his full basket convinces me that he is the possessor of some secret of which I am densely ignorant.

Several of the children in town are sick with measles and whooping-cough.

A new arrival at the house of Mr. W. A. Brown,— "My daughter, Oh! my daughter."

Mr. H. Pedwell came very near taking a sky route to the hereafter last Monday. The large boiler in his sawmill at Brookholm was found to be leaking, and Mr. Pedwell was examining it. He was on his knees looking into the furnace when suddenly the whole business went up with a report like a thunder clap. Debris was scattered in every direction, but fortunately Mr. Pedwell escaped. His must be a lucky star, or perhaps it was because he was on his knees at the time of the explosion. Mr. Pedwell suffers about $200 damages.—Thornbury Standard.
