

...you it's rough on me. Anythin' you ars'd me to do, Joe—anythin' as I c'd do o' meself like—I'd do ut, mate, without sayin' why or wherefore. But sen' the ole man to the workus—I can't do that, lad. I know yer think I orter; but I can't Joe—I can't do ut.

"A pretty fool yer made o' me now, ain't yer? I giv' up booze an' cut tom-mies w'en tuk up wiv yer, 'Liza; but you'd see me at blazes suner 'an giv' up that drucken o'e wagabone wot lives on yer, an' perwents yer havin' a man as a'd be good to yer."

"It 'd break me heart, Joe, ter 'ave 'im die in the workus."

"Yer thinks a bloomin' sight more uv a wrong un than yer does uv a right un," said the man savagely.

She gave him a look which must have convinced him of his error; but blinded by passion, he refused to see.

"Well," he snarled, "one of us 'as got ter scoot—him or me. There ain't room fer two."

The girl made no reply, and they went on.

But silence was too oppressive and stifling. Near Waterloo station the man spoke again.

"How much yer tuk, 'Liza?"

The question was abrupt, but the tone was friendly. It indicated a change of feeling.

"Sevin' an' three."

He extended his hand. She put the money into it without a word.

"Meet me at the Garding in the mornin'," 'Liza, and I'll stock the basket for yer," said he, returning her nine pence.

It was a curious transaction, but the explanation was probably to be found in the despairing utterance of the woman.

"He's 'ad 'em awful bad agen, Joe. Lads night it wur that dreadful—"

She stopped warned by the cloud that was sweeping up over her companion's brow.

The man's countenance had suddenly darkened, sparks from the nether fires danced in his eyes, the old hard, vindictive look had returned.

"I wish he may die. I wish he wur dead!" he muttered, fiercely.

"Oh, Joe! Joe, if yer love me, dun say thim words!" entreated the girl.

"I say 'em cos I loves yer; cos it's its 'ony 'im wot's keepin' yer from a man as wants ter make a 'appy woman uv yer. I says 'em cos I means 'em. No 'fense ter yer, 'Liza."

"Yain't a bad sort, Joe," said the girl, turning her swimming eyes full on him; "but yer a bit down on the ole man."

He gave the barrow an unnecessarily vigorous shove.

"I'm goin' inter the 'Cut,' 'Liza, ter finish. No, I ain't dun so dusty"—answering the question the girl had put to him half an hour before. "I started out wiv a dozen, an' this yer's th' 'ony one left." He emptied the contents of the basket on the board. "I shall knock 'em in the 'Cut' at freppence. Tain't orfen they see cherries like them in New Cut. They're city fruit, they are. 'I'll look 'roun' arter I clear out."

As he walked away his eyes followed her.

"She thinks a bloomin' sight too much she do, o' that drucken ole scamp, her father!" he growled, staring after the retreating figure; "but I ain't all a fool, mate. Grit's wuth gold."

.....

In the third pair back of a tenement house in Lambeth a girl was kneeling by the side of a bed. A paper bag was lying on the coverlet, and some cherries had fallen on the floor. On the bed lay the body of a man. The room reeked with the fumes of whiskey. The long, lithe fingers of the girl's right hand were clasped convulsively around the hand of the motionless figure extended on the bed.

"Joe!" she moaned; "Joe, lad, ye've got yer wish. The ole man'll never rile yer any more. I love yer mate, dearer than life; but it's th'm words o' your'n as I shall hear, an' not parson's, on the day yer takes me inter church."

"It 'd break me heart, Joe, ter 'ave 'im die in the workus."

"Yer thinks a bloomin' sight more uv a wrong un than yer does uv a right un," said the man savagely.

CHAPTER IV.

Alice became weaker and grew really ill. A tour on the continent was strongly recommended by the doctors as the likeliest means of restoration. It was impossible for me to go; but some
