JUST FOR TODAY

Just for today, dear, let us stand apart
And let the world rush on. Oh, I could weep
To be so happy, here, against your heart;
Let others yearn and fail, or fall asleep,
Or mingle in the strife as best they may,
Just for today.

Just for today, love, let there be no light,
Save in my eyes for you and yours for me,
Shut out the troubled gaze, the lips grown white,
The dreadful cry of the world's agony,
The dull and sodden earth, the sky's dim gray,
Just for today.

Just for today, together stand and rest;
Time has been winged with us since first we met,
Now in the ecstasy of love confessed,
The voice still broken and the lashes wet,
The veil of silence gently drawn away—
Just for today.

Just for today, my dearest, hand in hand,
With pulse and heart in tune, for these brief hours,
Joy pauses on her pinnacle, we stand
Each in the other's heart, among love's flowers,
We, in our new-found Eden, lose our way;
Just for today.

—LUCY WEBLING.
