Good Combs the Beekeeper's Asset.

An asset to the extracted honey producer is combs, good combs and plenty of combs. It is sometimes a problem to obtain and maintain sufficient stock, especially if the apiary is being enlarged. Moreover, there are several important problems associated. Fundimentally, good combs are obtainable only when built on full sheets of wire foundation. Such combs will endure; naturally built combs will not stand the wear and tear of repeated honey extraction. Beside being weak and likely to break out of the frames, naturally drawn combs usually contain drone cells to some extent, if not in excess. The presence of drone cells in combs, used either in the brood chamber or in extracting supers, is a source of continued disadvantage. Drone cells in combs are always costly. They may cost swarms; they may dampen the honey storing instincts (bees are adverse to the storing of honey in drone cells, until there is no other space available) if the drone cells are in the super, their presence induces the queen to leave the brood chamber. It is a maxim to have only combs of all worker cells reinforced with wire; to this end, full sheets of foundation are essential and economical.

The best combs are always produced during a honey flow, yes, when there is a surplus coming in; good combs may be produced in the earlier part of the season, just prior to the cropping season; yet, regardless of season, the best of combs are obtainable only on strong colonies.

Conversely, weak colonies, without the stimulation of the honey flow, fail to draw out the foundation evenly and fully: holes may even be gnawed in the foundations, which holes, when built in, will probably be filled with drone cells. With care, frames of full foundation, to be drawn out, may be supplied alternately with combs of brood or honey. Moreover, the tendency is for bees to bulge the old combs, and to correspond, only partially draw out the foundation of the new comb, perhaps leaving the corners open. The best results are usual when several frames with foundation are grouped in one side of the hive, or a full super given. In order to induce the attaching of the comb to the bottom bar, new combs may be drawn out in the super, over a powerful colony and during a honey flow.

Having acquired new combs, good care should be taken of them. If they are intended for extracted honey production, they should be kept apart from the brood nest, not allowing brood to be reared in them. Combs darkened with brood rearing are not considered as wholesome for honey production as are virgin (new) combs. Furthermore it is considered on good evidence that dark combs will darken and hence deteriorate the light grades of honey. One generation of brood in a comb may not injure it for light honey cropping; it is thought by some to toughen and strengthen the comb, yet the more particular producers are equipping with virgin combs for the supers. These choice extracting combs are a valuable asset. Preserved from year to year, they should endure. Although bee-labor has not advanced in price, all bee supplies are increasingly costly, hence good combs are to-day a greater asset than ever.—Dr. Burton M. Gates, O. A. College, Guelph.
