The Vagabond Farmer

Special Dispatch from Spanish Banks, Vancouver, B.C.

(By Alex. Sim)

Vancouver, city of cloud and sunshine, has treated us generously with the latter for two days. Last night your Vagabond Voyageurs, sleeping innocently under the Great Dipper and the North Star, were visited suddenly and unmistakably by the former. In a word—there is rain in Vancouver. They don't call it rain here. It is just dampish; it is a dry rain, they say, and you don't notice it.

Three days ago we scented the tang of salt waters. Since Columbus many good lives have been lost in the struggle to blaze a land or water route from Atlantic to the Pacific. Strong, nardy men they were, consumed by the lure of the unknown, the desire for adventure, unmindful of hardship—they spent themselves in search of the elusive Pacific. We had something of the feeling of the explorer or pioneer as we drove ur tent pegs into the soil of Spanish Banks. The goal achieved, the journey ended, Country Life from Coast to Coast is now completed; perhaps not a pioneer effort, but at least a significant effort to reach the mind of farmers, and the problems of farming of our Dominion, which stretches as the Psalmist says, from Sea to Sea.

Spanish Banks

Before us the blue waters of the English Bay, with the blue Coastal Mountains in the background. On the hills behind us the famous site of the University of British Columbia. On Spanish Banks, Sir Geo.rge Vancouver landed and discussed with the Spanish their comparative claims to this Pacific territory. Here Indian and furtrader met and bartered, to provide the nucleus for white settlement. Here the miner, driven by gold lust, landed to trek inland toward the gold-bearing water of the Fraser and Thompson. Here the railway fastened its iron tentacles to draw together the farflung territories of British North America.

From trading post, mining town, and railroad terminus, Vancouver has grown to a ranking Canadian city; air base, industrial centre supplying the Canadian West, gateway to the Orient. Prophets say Vancouver will challenge the supremacy of Montreal, surpass Toronto, become Canada's greatest city. Already it is a cosmopolitan centre, a far cry from seaman Vancouver's camping ground on the Spanish Banks.

Mountain Climbing With Floradora

Flora the Ford, and Dora the dumb trailer have conducted your voyageurs since we last met over many a perilous trail and difficult ascent. When we wrote last week we were near the United States border. From there we travelled north and west finally reaching the Thompson river. The road down the Thompson and Fraser rivers, which finally brought us to the coast, follows an old Caribou Trail. How the Caribou traversed it, is beyond me; and we will never know, for strangely enough, there are only elk in the country now. Even today, with modern engineering and Flora's Fordish stubbornness, the trail was not an easy journey. The trail led us from the brink of the swirling Fraser waters, up to dizzy heights of almost a mile above sea level. The scenery is beautiful beyond description, but the driver who admires it without stopping may be mingled with the scenery in a way not approved by parents or insurance companies.

Camping facilities on the trail are as yet limited. Cooking our supper one night in a lonely canyon we were expecting a visit from a bear. Instead, a group of girls drifted in to join our sing song. I discovered that by flattering their singing they could be induced to wash the dishes. Take the tip, harrassed husbands! One other night we camped on the grounds of the Indian Residential School. They had a splendid plant that compared favorably with a Boarding Schol in the East. It is operated by the Anglican church and it gave us a glimpse of the difficulties attending work among the Indians, as well as achievements realized. All across the country we have been impressed with the efforts of the Home Mission Boards of our churches, as well as the opportunities for service that have not yet been explored.

While We Sojourn Here

The Caribou Trail, without its Caribou, brings us back to Vancouver and our little tent on the Spanish Banks. We will spend almost a week here, before we sail for Vancouver Island; from the Island we will travel directly and quickly through our great sister nation, going via Salt Lake City and Chicago.

But while we sojourn here a great deal is to be seen and learned. Today we covered the waterfront. There was one of the C.P.R. queens of the Pacific to visit — the Empress of Russia — sleek as an Oriental goddess. Near the Empress we found the fishing fleet coming in, busy as ants, foul smelling. At the pier they unloaded salmon and we saw the meat go into cans we know so well in the East. It is raining today, you remember, or at least, it is dampish. Water-logged as wharf rats we crawled into a cheap chow-house, to get a full course meal for fifteen cents.

Besides, we must visit saw mills, Stanley Park with Pauline Johnston's tomb, the great Oriental section and the University. But the visiting and telling of it must wait until next week.
