"WE'RE tired of the camp and we're going to move on. See?"

Orrek Gordon lifted his head. "Going to walk out on me and quit? Your wages are good here."

The foreman of the lumber gang sneered. "Say, money ain't everything. We want to get back to town and we're going." He slouched back to the tent and joined the crowd of surly men around the great campfire.

From the log bungalow beyond the camp twinkled many lights. Orrek stared at the Christmas candles. Marcia had placed them there, saying they brought peace to the household. And now, with his men walking out on him, Marcia would be lost to him.

A skimming sound on the firm snow aroused him and Marcia, a gay little figure in her white furs, caught at his arm and came to a standstill on her skis. "Why stay out here when I want you, Orrek? We're making up a bridge table.

"Why stay out here when I want you?"

A bridge table when his future career was toppling down!

"Orrek, what's wrong with the men?" she asked. "My maid told me there had been a row there."

Orrek's eyes blazed as he tucked the small hand under his arm. How he loved her! In a few brief sentences he told her of the discontent among his men. "It's the loneliness that gets them," he finished, "the lack of amusement."

"If they walk out you cannot keep your contract. That will queer you with the owners." She turned and left him in silence.

Back at the bungalow Marcia tumbled the contents of her clothes closet while talking rapidly to her maid, Ninette. "Isn't it lucky that I taught you those chords, Ninette?"

The camp men, grumbling around the fire, fell into a sudden silence as the gay plink-a-plunk of a banjo sounded in the clearing.

Gebert, surly gang leader, jerked out his pipe. "Listen, boys!"

Down the hill Marcia came gaily, her fingers bringing jolly notes from the strings. The frosty air echoed and re-echoed as Ninette joined in.

"I know that," declared Gebert.

Carried along by memories, the men joined in, forgetting the loneliness of the Christmas eve, forgetting their fancied troubles.

Marcia had come to the very edge of the great fire and stood there picking at the strings. Above her towered the man she loved, just beyond her stood the men in a semi-circle, their unshaven faces lighted by a mutual love of music.

"How many of you play small instruments?" she asked softly.

The answers brought a quick smile to her lips. "I thought there would be many of you to help me out," she cried.

"I want to have a string-band," hurried on Marcia, "and I need volunteers. A violin, maybe two or three. A guitar—"

"I play the flute," interrupted Jacques.

"At home I have an accordion," came a wistful voice, "but—"

"Fine," interrupted Marcia. "I have, tonight, made out an order that should have been mailed sooner. It is my Christmas gift to our men. The order is for musical instruments. I wish each man would write down his instrument and give it to me. With luck we should have the orders filled in three days and we'll practice hard so that New Year's day may find us ready. How about it?"

There was an instant response as hardened palms came together.

Just beyond the pines a wolf howled, but Marcia was looking up into her lover's eyes.

Wrapping Small Gifts

An unusual way to wrap a number of small gifts that are to be given in a good-sized Christmas box is to tuck each one in an envelope made of either plain red, holly, silver or gold paper. Wrap each gift first in plain white tissue paper, folded in envelope style, and seal the flaps of both the inner and outer envelopes with contrasting seals. Patterns for the envelopes can be cut from ordinary envelopes by tearing one apart and either enlarging on it or trimming it down.

STEPHENS — WILKINSON

A very happy event took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Wilkinson, Rock Mills, on Wednesday, Dec. 15th, at 3.30 p.m., when their eldest daughter, Hazel Elizabeth, was united in marriage to William Sykes Stephens, son of Mr. Dougald Stephens and the late Mrs. Stephens of Feversham. Rev. L. Jacklin, Anglican minister of Dundalk, performed the ceremony in the presence of forty relatives and friends of the bride and groom.

The handsome young bride entered the living room on the arm of her father to the strains of Lohengrin's Wedding March, played by Mrs. F. B. Keys, and took her place beneath an arch of evergreens, beautifully decorated with flowers, pink and white streamers and large white bell. She was attired in a street-length frock of heavenly blue triple sheer with silver trimmings, and wore a wreath of pink and blue gardenias in her hair and carried a shower bouquet of Sweetheart roses. Miss Dolly Ottewell, as bridesmaid, chose for her costume a two-piece dress of treasure gold crepe and also carried Sweetheart roses. Florence and Dorothy Wilkinson, younger sisters of the bride, who preceded her to the arch, made very pretty flower girls, gowned in pale pink silk crepe and each carried a basket of mauve and white 'mums. The groom was supported by his brother, Mr. Lloyd Stephens.

While the register was being signed Mr. and Mrs. Keys sang very sweetly "O Perfect Love." Mrs. Keys also entertained with several musical numbers, which were much enjoyed. The groom's gifts to the bride and bridesmaid were silver casseroles, to the organist pyrexware, to the flower girls necklaces, and to the groomsman a silk scarf.

At six o'clock the bridal couple led the way to the dining room, which was tastefully decorated in pink and white, when dinner was served, the tables being lovely with cut flowers and tall pink and white tapers, which burned during the supper hour. The bride's table was centred with a three-story wedding cake adorned with a miniature bride and groom, the cake being made and decorated by the bride's aunt, Mrs. E. Russell. Miss Mable Ross presided over the tables and was ably assisted by three girl friend of the bride, Misses Elva, Verna and Eleanor Russell. During the course of the dinner a t t was proposed to the bride and om by Rev. Jacklin and Mr. Keys, and was responded to by the groom.

Later in the evening the young couple left amid showers of confetti and good wishes for a short honeymon trip to Toronto and other points, the bride travelling in two-piece dress of old crepe, English wool tweed coat and brown accessories. On their return they will reside on the groom's farm near Feversham. Following the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Wilkinson had their youngest daughter, Dorothy, baptised.

FEVERSHAM

Last Friday evening the lantern slides shown in the Gospel Workers' Church, depicting the life of David Livingstone, were very much enjoyed. A short program was given, after which prizes were distributed to the children by Mr. Mervin Davidson, superintendent of the Sunday School. Rev. and Mrs. McNichol were also presented with gifts from the congregation.

Mr. and Mrs. G. Eby and Marion attended the funeral on Saturday afternoon of the former's sister, Miss Margaret Eby, at Port Elgin. Miss Eby passed away after a short illness. We extend our sympathy.

Several in the village are ill with the 'flu. They are: Mr. and Mrs. Francis and Ruth, the latter has an an attack of pneumonia, Mr. and Mrs. H. Alexander, Bill and Jack McKee. We hope they will all be well again soon.

A number of the school children are sick and the school has been closed this week. The Christmas concert, which was to have been held Tuesday night, has been postponed until Wednesday, Jan. 5th.

Mr. and Mrs. Eby, Marion and Mrs. Donaldson spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Herb Eby and Stephen at Barrie. Sheila Armstrong returned with them to spend the winter with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Davidson.

CAN FOXES SWIM

A couple of weeks ago on this page we had a story of how a flock of Wellington County ducks outwitted three foxes by staying well out from shore on their favourite pond. Foxes we stated, do not swim, but like cats prefer to keep their feet dry. Here, it would seem, we were wrong: not a very unusual occurrence at that, Mr. Albert Kirkness, of Arthur Township, says so, and he probably knows more about it than we do. Foxes do not like to swim and seldom do, but when driven to it they take to the water. It is a well known trick of Reynard, when hardpressed by the hounds, to plunge into a stream, swim for a bit, throw the hounds off the scent, then double back and secure safety. This is a clever trick, but one on which the fox has not a monopoly. Mr. Kirkness claims he has seen jackrabbits do the same thing, and who ever thought that jacks could swim?—Arthur Entehprise.
