the rush of the spring business, to give like sketches of the neighboring villages. Any of our friends who can forward us statistics in connection with the locality in which they live will greatly oblige us. The state of affairs in Ireland appears to be growing worse. A fatal encounter took place between the police and the people on the first of the month, which resulted in two men being shot dead, four or five severly injured, and about thirty others wounded. Such a state of affairs is deplorable in the extreem, and we much fear that more blood will be shed and many homes made desolate ere peace is restored to unhappy Ireland.
