We reached the dock about 1:30 a.m., and all the passengers and most of the crew had went to bed alout 12, intending to skeep until morning, as the boat was not going to leave the dock that day, little expecting to be awakened by the cry of fire. remember hearing the whistle blow on striking the dock, and then I h ard the cry of fire, but I could scarcely he-· lieve that the persons doing the shouting meant all they said, and I did not get up as soon as I might, but when my partner, Mr. R. McKenzie, came to the door of my state-room and callvest, and overcoat, I got out of there just as fast as I knew how. I threw my clothes on the wharf and ran back for my value, but the baggage room was so full of smoke that I couldn't see, and I took another man's valise instead of my own. I then done what I could to help save some of the passengers, but I suppose you had ful particulars at the time it happened, clothes, watch and some money, but I
