It is rarc, even in se of men, for hair of this color to bemen relative at so early an age, and woman's ert mer indoubtedly retains its abundance and lor much longer than that of men. But anded supposing Marie Antoinette had dyed in co hair, and were no longer able to apply placed dye, neither one night or a month of and costs would be sufficient to restore the ral gray upon the surface. Let J. H. es, care he will be told the same thing. When is no longer applied, the hair resumes its had for trai color at the roots only, and a concolor to show itself through the dyed upper part of the hair, of which the artificial color would remain.

for Lord Beaconsfield, he may, of course, have dyed his hair and beard, as I feel sure his friend and fellow dandy, Lord Lytton did, but, from myown personalobservation, I do not believe that he did. It has been an amusement of mine for some years past, when I have nothing better to do-as e. g., in railway carriages, at evening parties, etc., to study people's hair and see whether it is dyed or not, and I have acquired considerable experience. It is very difficult to keep the roots thoroughly well dyed, as they grow a little every day, and therefore, if one looks closely, one can always see some gray or white roots somewhere, and these would be apparent even in a photograph. Then, again, in the case of a man with a swarthy complexion, without color, like Lord Beaconsfield, when the hair grows gray the complexion, as a rule, grows gray likewise, and consequently, if the hair is dyed dark brown or black (the color of Lord Beaconsfield's) the hair no longer puits the complexion. Now I had an opportunity of closely examining Lord Beaconsfield from a short distance at a public meeting some four or five years before his death, and I saw nothing of this sort about him. Besides this it was stated by at least one newspaper corrrespondent who had seen Lord Beaconsfield after his death that there were a few, very few silver streaks in his hair. Now no silver streaks can possibly appear in any hair that has been dyed.

F. CHANCE. The following story was told me by one convinced of its truth: A young lady went to France as governess, but endured some cruel treatment from her employers. She ultimately succeeded in getting away, and came to her married brother in England. Worn out with fatigue, sorrow and anxiety, her relatives begged her to go to bed at once. and defer until the morrow the account of her sufferings. She yielded to their entreaties, but on entering her bedroom the next morning they found the poor sufferer dead. She lay on her side, and on lifting her head they found all the hair next to the pillow perfectly white. The medical men thought, had she been permitted to relieve her mind of all its sorrows immediately on her return, her life might have been spared, and her hair remained unchanged.

I was intimately acquainted with a lady whose hair, when she married, at the age of 26, was raven black. When I saw her six months after, it was white as snow. In the interval she had made the terrible discovery that she had married a maniac.

When I was in India and my hair was beginning to fall off, my native barber used to encourage me by saying "High cast only go bald." Whether this was Hindoo folklore, or simply flattery to a sahib, I could

AYER'S

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs. such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Brenchitis, Asthma, and Consumption.

Thefew compositiona which have won the confidence of mankind and become household words, among not only one but many nations, must have extraordinary virtues. Perhaps no one ever secured so wide a reputation, or maintained it so long as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. Ithas been known to the public about forty years, by a long continued series of marvelous cures, that have won for it a confidence in its virtues, never equaled by any other medicine. It still makes the most effectual cures of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, that can be made by medical skill. Indeed, the CHERRY PECTORAL has really robbed these dangerous diseases of the terrors to a great extent, and given a feeling of immunity from their painful effects, that is well founded, if the remedy be taken in season. Every family should have it in their closet for the ready and prompt relief of its members. Sickness, suffering, and even life is saved by this timely protection. The prudent should not neglect it, and the wise will not. Keep it by you for the protection it affords by its early use in sudden attacks.
