Why Women Work.

It is eurious that the world has yet to be convinced that women do not love to work any better than men do. They are creaited with dependence, with a love of ease and fuxury, and yet when a salaried position is in question the women has to take less because "she needs less."

It can not be because she spends less, for the extravagance of woman was dwelt upon by Solomo and Jeremiah, and it is a song that has never known a rest. The reason er the difference in wages is generally ound to be in the assertion that women who do not need a support or who aave few esponsibilities crowd into the paid occupations. There is an inconsistency here. If she loves ease why does she work? If she spends more, how is it she needs less?

The truth is that very few women work from any other reason but necessity. Here and there is one who loves independence. works for it, and deserves it, and here and there is another who would rather work than forego certain luxuries, and she earns them, but the majority of women work because they have responsibilities, and as a class they are more reliable, sober and economical workers, for no woman with a family of little children gambles away their bread and butter, or no sister or daughter who ir, of necessity, the bread-winner, wastes what she earns, and comeshome to a sad, hungry family, bringing them empty hands and an indifference to their reeds.

HOW SENTIMENTAL YOUNG LADIES SHOULD MANAGE HEALTHY APPETITES.

There are few women who can't be chaire. ing if they earnestly set about it-even while cating. I mention this test of feminine grace because it is a severe one. The prosees of filling the stomach ordained by nature is vulgar in itself, and a great deal of daintiness is required in the woman who would eat unrepellantly. Fried oysters are a sore trial to the ethereal girl who sits down to them with her admirers after a late theatrical performance. It has been five or six hours since dinner, and she is as hungry as a bear that has lived on its paws all winter. She knows that bedtime is close ahead, and she will not have to endure her corset long if she does not tighten it from the inside. But a big appetite is disenchanting in a maiden, and fried oysters are greasy. The problem before her is now to put the seven cysters into herself without once convincing the young man that her stomach is about like his own in its periodical call for food. There is a risk in the matter that no skill can whelly eliminate. The best rule is to paton an expression of very mild dislain each mout ful, as though you took it in under protest. Don't overdo this, and look as though sickened, but just elevate the brows a traffe, smile faintly, and try to give the impression that you tolerate a fried oyster, but don thanker af er it. I watched a slender, graceful, a gel-faced creature in a fashionab'e oyster house the other night, and saw by negler ting her deportment she was shocking the follow across the table. Perhaps an did 't care whether he adored her or not. Anyhow, she was putting the oysters into her mouth by halves, chewing them with and sprised gas'o, swallowing plenty of brown and ant cabbage along with them, and taking no prins whatever to disguise the fact that she was enjoying them mightily. At the next table sat a thicker and older woman, who practiced the art of oyster eating as I have indicated it. Her f cial expression was clever. She slipped in the food in big pieces when her companion wasn't looking, and nibbled when he was looking. She got away with a hearty meal without appearing to have taken anything to speak of, and it was only the empty plates that revealed the tact. She was not less skilful in drinking her half of a quart of champagne. The glass was lifted to her lips like the hand of a queen to kiss; he mouth shut over barely an inch of the brim; there was no slopping or gurgling; the wine trinkled neatly down her throat, but with quite sufficient clerity. When starting to go out, with considerable of the fluid effervescing in her brain, she failed for a dreamy instant to recognize her reflection in a full length mirror, and tried to turn out to let herself pass herself. The blunder was seen by nobody but me. She recovered her equanimity instantly, and departed as smoothly as a

An Ingenious Clock.

A very ingenious electric clock, for use in railway stations, has recently been exhibited in Boston. It gives automatically the signals for starting trains at the proper time, and it is automatically regulated at noon each day by electric impulse from some astronomical station. Though the details of the apparutus are rather complicated, the principle is simple. The mechanism for giving the signals shows two discuss, each pierced with 1440 holes, arranged in spirals of 24 turns, with 60 holes in each turn. small metallic pegs are inserted in the holes corresponding to any given minute and hour, and the contact of these with an electric conductor allows passage of the current ter the signal. Whon any change is made in the time for starting trains the pegs are shifted. One, two, three, or more successive or different signals can be given for each train. It is proposed to connect all the stations of a railway with the main office, so that signals for starting train; will be given from a single apparatus.

The first horse railroad was started in 1826, and the conductors had forty-five years the start of the bell-punch.

The first newspaper tdvertisement appeared in 1652, and it has taken just 231 years to convince some business men that it is a good investment.

The first temperance society in this country was organized at Saratoga in 1826. The opposition secured a foothold in 1492.

The Hon. D. L. Macpherson, Speaker of the Canadian Parliament, has by ordering the chair occupied at one time by the Princess Louise to be cut down and used for the Speker's chair, roused the ire of the Canadians, who would like the chair to be placed in the Historical Museum rather than in the private house of the Speaker, who has the right to take the chair used by him as his own personal property.

Mr. William Grey, who is the heir presumptive to the Earl of Stamford, and will, on coming to full inheritance, have an income of four hundred thousand dollars a year, is a grandson of the naturalist Gilbert White of Selbourne. The grandfather of the late Earl of Stamford, owned the whole borough of Ashton-under-Lyne, and held all the freehold with the exception of one cottage for which he offered as many sovereigns as would cover the roof. "No, friend Grey," said the old Quaker who owned it, "Ashton-under-Lyne belongs to me and thee. You can't have it all."

In King Hoky-Poky's Dominions.

Miss Gordon Cumming has written a nar rative of her tour among the volcan c lakes and craters of the main Island of Hawaii. Of these extraordinary and fiery scenes she gives us some admirable sketches, less beau-A hundred and five cows are on the dairy | tiful indeed than her exquisite views of the Tahitian peaks, but unsurpassed in their way for weird sublimity and awe-inspiring General celebrated their golden wedding grandeur. Among the ever-varying crags and shifting pools of the Lake of Fire on Kitanea, Milton's poetic fancies seem almost to have taken actual shape. The boiling mass never twice presents the same aspect; sometimes the Lake disappears altogether for a while ; sometimes it lies sleeping in the centre of deep solid cliffs; sometimes, again, it seethes and foams against enormous temporary pinnacles of hardened lava. Even the apparently rocky surface on which the visitor stands to look down into the mountain pool is but the thinnest and most brittle crust, bridging over the treacherous mass of subterranean fire. Miss Cumming was fortunate enough, too, to happen upon the exact moment of an eruption, and to see rivers of in andescent lava break out over the bed of the great crater, which, when she first arrived, lay cold and grey within the circ ing cliffs, so that she could walk across it without serious danger. She also came in for an earthquake. Some of the curious cup-shaped vents in the extinct crater of Haleakala remind one strongly of the lesser craters in the moon; and Mr. Dennis, the British antiquarian, has | indeed the whole of this very dry and verbought the site of the temple of Sardis, Asia | dureless Hawaiian mountain district must closely resemble lunar scenery; only, as Miss Cumming rightly notes, the immensewell-like depth of the moon's crater at once distinguishes them from anything of the sort to be seen on the surface of our planet. Copernicus, the finest in shape among the lunar heights, is 12,000 feet deep in the central pit, and Gassendi is 9,600. Still, the general effect of Miss Cumming's sketches is ridiculously like that obtained from a view of the moon through a powerful telescope. In both we get the naked result of volcanic energies, unaffected by the disintegrating influences of vegetation or of humid atmospheric changes. Kalakaua was lately compelled to make a tour of the world. It appears that the King's first care on his return to his decadent little realm was to build a new cathedral, to complete and furnish his own palace, and to make pr parations on a grand scale for the coronation of himself and his Queen-the throne and crowns to be im ported from Paris, and all the ladies of Honolulu to appear in sweeping trains and full Court dress as worn at Buckingham Palace. If this is all the good that semibarbarous chiefs obtain from a tour in Europe, it would be much better that they should stay at home. — Pall Mall Gazette.

A Hindoo Dramatist. Babu Keshub Chunder Sun, the Hindoo religious reformer, whose visit to this country will not have been forgotten, has written a native drama, the first representation of which has been given Calcutta with unusual eclat. The play, which is very long-longer, but apparently more lively than a modern Drury Lane Pantomine-is described by native critics as designed "to inculcate the purifying principles of religion in the garb of hintrionic representation." The vices of "Young Bengal" are gone for in a vividly effective style. A heavy drinking bout, the sad results, the interposition of the police, the insanity of Royal, who told him that it meant the gods | the hero's wife, the anger of the virtuous father at the sight of the Brahmo reforming preachers, the repentance of the hero, the appearance of a hermit, the tournament between Vice and Virtue, the reconciliation of all concerned, and the triumph of the Brahmo principles are all exhibited with great effect.

A Model Home.

One of our exchanges has a column head ed "Our Home," and at the top it gives an illustration which is supposed to represent that hallowed retreat. The husband and father is represented as reading a bread board; the mother, dressed in a bunting dress with an overskirt two feet longer than the dress proper, is reading a cigar box or a checker board; and the rest of the family, some thirteen or fourteen souls, cluster around the table reading different kinds of things; while a daughter in one corner of the room is climbing up on the keyboard of a piano with her feet, and her face is wreathed in a smile that wraps her rosebud mouth twice around her Grecian head and buries itself in her clustering hair. One of the boys tas dropsy of the brain, and his pants are too short. Another is trying with great difficulty to tie the cat's tail around the tableleg, and a little daughter is pouring the sawdust vitals out of a rag doll down a knot hole in the floor. It is a perfect picture of home contentment and perennial joy .- Lara mie Boomerang.
