

Customs receipts at New York for the month of August show no reduction on account of the tariff.

A Bill to establish a system of tramways in London, and including a clause for the appropriation of £100,000 in aid of emigration, has been introduced in the English House of Commons.

A demonstration took place recently in Trafalgar Square, London, in favor of Bradlaugh. There were 30,000 present, and the speaker of resistance by Bradlaugh was loudly applauded. Copies of the resolutions were presented to Her Majesty, Mr. Gladstone, and the Speaker of the House.

Lord Shaftesbury is no pessimist. He is a man of indomitable energy, and his efforts for the improvement of the human race, and so great a task, to look upon the poorest sort, and to lift them from their misery.

A letter to His Holiness President of the Holy See, while justifying the position taken by the French against the attacks of the papal Curia, declares that France has no intention of warring against the Church, and that an agreement will be arrived at between His Government and the Vatican.

Another enthusiast is anxious to try his hand at the Whirlpool. It is to be hoped that the attempt will be successful, and that the whirlpool will be kept open for the benefit of the world.

The attempted insurrection at Badajoz in Spain, and the capture of the fort, were not, however, supported by the inhabitants. The leader of the rebellion was a colonel of cavalry. Authority was restored and everything is tranquil.

The British Colonial Minister has received from the Australian Agents General in London a statement that, on account of the exorbitant price of wheat and the danger of the formation of a French penal settlement, Australia desires the annexation of a portion of the New Guinea, and a portion of the adjacent islands.

The exchange contains a humorous account of a man who had been in a hospital for some time, and who had been told by the doctor that he was to die. The man, however, does not state that the text is taken from 2nd Kings, viii, 13, quod.

A village parson last Sunday announced that "a prayer-meeting will be held at half-past seven o'clock next evening, and will be continued for several weeks." Rival churches must look to their laurels. Even the long windedness of the Rev. Mr. Sixteenth would be sorely tried at a two months' prayer meeting.

A musical wonder is exhibited in London called the canina. The notes reproduced are those of a long box. Keys on the outer board communicate with wires, which touch each other, and when the performer strikes a key, and the contact warns the dog, a yell, a bark, or a bass growl is the result. The harmony is defective, but the instrument has given the strange orator a moderately useful facility.

That is one, even if he be at home in French language, to make of an entree of "Pâtis de boeuf en allumettes," a palace of beef in lucifer matches? He heard of lucifer making a good thing to a pig, though that plat might be to be a leaf palace; and yet we saw the other day, and wondered who composed the menu, and also who the chef could be a Frenchman.

The fate of Carey, the informer, has attracted the notice of the world. He followed his more notorious predecessors in the same line. It is curious that Ireland, the informer is looked upon with something more than perhaps in any other country, should produce such a prolific number of these creatures, who, however useful they may be, are certainly not desirable to the community for honest people.

It is not always safe to quote without first intimating that you are going to do so. It is not very long since a member of the English House of Commons called down upon his head the thunders of authority by saying that "some damned good-natured friend" had told him so and so. Of course when he explained that he was only quoting from Sheridan, nothing further could be said, and laughter took the place of denunciation.

We are reminded of this incident by something which happened in a house where we were visiting not long ago. He was in the drawing-room waiting for a summons to luncheon, when from below there issued an appalling sound as of the smash of a whole trayful of glass and crockery. All were either relations or intimate friends, so ladies included, all ran down to see what had happened. Some of the children were dancing round the wreck in huge glee, and were promptly accused by the hostess of doing the damage. But mine host arrived at once at the conclusion that the maid was the culprit, and had fled in hopes that the blame would be laid upon the youngsters—as was the case. And that wicked paterfamilias cried aloud in his wrath: "Destructible, damnable, deceitful woman!" Horror on all sides, indignant protestations from the ladies, and no condonation of that atrocious language, until mine host, astonished at the temper he had created, explained that his words were neither his own, nor were they personal, but merely a quotation from the poet Otway! Then a calm of despair, and a picking up of the pieces.

Chinese ingenuity has invented a new plan of protecting carrier pigeons from birds of prey. A whistle, consisting of ten small bamboo tubes, is, by means of a thread which passes under the wings, fastened to the pigeon's tail. In flight the rush of air through the tubes produces a shrill sound, and it is said that birds of prey are thus kept off.

The young lover proposed to marry her, and she consenting, they were united. The families seem to be of a humorous turn, for when the brother heard of the escapade he offered himself to his sister-in-law, who accepted him.

We do not remember to have seen it stated upon what authority Mr. Beckwith bases his claim to be the champion swimmer of England. "One Who Knows" says that his title to that position is not of the clear-cut, and that in England it is perfectly well known that Jones, of Leeds, can give him a long start and then win; but that the latter, now retired, and Beckwith claims to be the champion because he will not come forth from that retirement. Our informant has apparently had many opportunities of seeing Beckwith in the water in London and elsewhere, and readily grants that he is a good and clever ornamental swimmer, though Miss Beckwith is considered the more graceful of the two. But, says the gentleman referred to, "I hope Canadians and Americans will not swallow the tale that Beckwith is our champion swimmer on his own ipse dixit, for we have more than one who can beat him hollow at a distance."

The Roman Catholic Bishop of Para and Amazonas, whose diocese includes the valley of the Amazon, has a plan for evangelizing the wild tribes along that mighty river. He proposes to construct a large ship. It will be superbly decorated, and so contrived as to serve as a church. The most precious woods with which the Amazon region abounds will wainscot the interior. The floating cathedral will possess its pulpit and confessional, its organ and baptismal font, and all the church furniture requisite for a splendid exercise of Catholic rites. The Bishop hopes to make it, by reason of its elegance and splendor, "an object of just pride and glory to the Amazonas and of edification to the whole Christian world." Propelled by steam and drawing but little water, it will carry the zealous missionaries along the natural highway to the most distant parts of the country, as far as Bolivia and Peru, Ecuador and Colombia and Venezuela, and even to the most distant European colonies of Guiana.

"Knowledge is power," said Lord Bacon, and we doubt if even his very learned lordship was ever aware of the tremendous power contained in a thorough knowledge of the snobbishness of mankind. Poor Tom Moore was not the only man who "dearly loved a lord." The Canadian papers have been full of particulars of an English swindler who has lately been "doing" the smart Canucks wholesale, simply by playing on their love of all that pertains to blue blood. He called himself by the most aristocratic names; said that he was the son of an earl, a duke, of we know not whom, and talked so delightfully of high life in England that he found ready admittance to some good Dominion circles. Albeit he met his match once or twice, and got a most unceremonious conne. Had he not, it is allowed, indulged in the most delicious gossip about society at "home in England," he would never have come over his snobbish dupes; but as he was able to give minute particulars of the ways and doings of "the old nobility," he was taken to the very hearts of several families.

We wonder if he obtained his knowledge of things aristocratic, as did a brother swindler who some years ago "had" the "gawks" on a similar "lay." This latter had been valet to an English lord!

A private letter from London says that the fading season is bravely maintained by the presence of many Americans. "Good Americans," Mr. Lowell says, "when they die, go to Paris," but many of them previously go to London. The lobby of the House of Commons, says our informant, is becoming a great resort of the male members of the family. Amongst others who have been there lately is Mr. Garatt, President of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway. Mr. Garatt has just earned distinction in a characteristic manner. When in Italy last year he had an interview with King Humbert, who, recognizing a brother sovereign, paid him many courtesies. Mr. Garatt devoted some time to consideration of how he would worthily repay this kindness. At last he had a happy thought. King Humbert, like his father Victor Emmanuel, is very fond of horses. Mr. Garatt was possessed of an almost priceless animal, an Arab steed, said to be the finest horse in the world. Certainly Mr. Garatt had £3,000 offered for it, which, considering it is neither a racer nor a trotter is pretty well. He determined to offer "Damasus" to the King. So delighted is His Majesty with the present, and so profound is his admiration for the beautiful horse, that he means to have a model of it, life size, carved in pure marble.

Mrs. Sarah Lippincott (Grace Greenwood) is said to be in London engaged in writing a biography of Queen Victoria.

William Black says that to feel as well-dressed as the other women round her sets any woman at ease, but to feel better dressed adds radiance to that ease.

Rosa Bonheur, in her sixty-first year, lives retired as ever, dresses in semi-masculine garments, and paints continuously.

Of two descendants of Martin Luther whose lineage is undoubted, and who bear his name, one is a carpenter of Kloster Allendorf, and the other a theological student in the university of Jena.

The King of Bavaria is building a secluded palace for himself, which he intends shall be the most elegant, commodious and magnificent human abode on earth, and with the largest banqueting hall.

Mr. Burne Jones, the great colorist among living British painters, has not humbled himself to design a curtain for the back of a piano. The work is outlined in crewels, and has been publicly exhibited.

Lady Wilde is tall, large, and usually dressed with a tendency towards her son's aestheticism. When she gives a reception in the day-time, she shuts out all sunlight, and by means of red shades on the gas throws a soft pink glow over everything.

Lord Salisbury is going himself to farm several of his farms now vacant. Close by the grand entrance of his ancestral Hatfield House, one of the grandest places in Great Britain, is a row of cottages that would disgrace an impoverished Irish landlord.

The death of King Mtesa of Uganda removes a very picturesque African potentate. His chair used to be placed on a leopard skin in the hall of audience, so that the hind claws served as a footstool, while the tail stretched along the floor in front. A number of charm; and a tusk were piled in a heap beside him, and his Grand Vizier and other courtiers were constantly employed in smoothing down the creases in his trousers. The late Khedivé sent two sheikhs to convert him to Mohammedanism, but in vain.

At the ball in Paris Millionaire Mackay hired the King of Sweden to dance with the American ladies, paying him $1,000 an hour for the work. The Prince of Wales telegraphed for an invitation, but was refused. Several descendants of the Buonaparte party who attempted to climb in through the windows were thrown into the basin of the fountain. This information is from an account in the Nevada Appeal, "based on reasonableness and an intimate knowledge of Mackay."

The Rev. Dr. Wordsworth, for many years Bishop of Lincoln, and well known as a Biblical commentator, has resigned in his seventy-sixth year, because of failing physical health, and "especially because I am overburdened with a sense of solemn responsibility for the spiritual welfare of the county of Nottingham, particularly of its great town containing a population of two hundred thousand souls, and requiring the vigilance and energy of a bishop in full vigor of mind and body."

Lord Ludesborough, who recently took a party of actors and actresses, including some Americans, on his drag into the country for a rural feast, has a fancy for mimetic animals, and keeps in his residence in Berkeley square a wonderful monkey and a black squirrel from the Rocky Mountains, which are great artists in their line. His blue drag, with a team of two browns and two grays, is a London institution, and may be seen regularly at Lord's, Henley, and all the racing meets. He was an occasional companion of the late Dundreary Sothorn, but when he heard that his brother-in-law, the Duke of Beaufort, was going with Sothorn on a fishing expedition for months, he remarked, "Very pleasant for three hours, but not for three months."

A long letter from Leigh Hunt to Robert Browning appears in one of our foreign contemporaries. The writer justly accuses himself of "terribly depressing," and promises that in future his letters shall be "of reasonable dimensions," if Mr. Browning encouraged him "with a few words in answer to them." About two-thirds of the communication is occupied with extravagant praise of Mrs. Browning's Aurora Leigh, and with first and last lines (or half-lines) of the passages that Hunt most liked in Robert Browning's poems. "Did it ever strike you," he asks, "how frightful it would be to be wholly prosperous and happy?—happy all your life? I think or fancy it would have made me look upon myself as a sort of outcast from the general lot and its claims, doomed to perish wholly and be put out, as a thing completed and done with. The incompleteness argued against us all here is surely our claim hereafter—incompleteness of joy, incompleteness of knowledge, incompleteness of nature. I think God means to aspire, just as He rounds orbs or oranges. He does not leave us anything else. Why should He leave us poor and anxious imperfections incomplete?"

The Wide, Wide World.

LIMA, REPUBLIC OF PERU.—Senior A. de La E. Daigado, L. L. D. and Counsellor, Tribunal of Justice, Lima, Republic of Peru, says: One single application of St. Jacobs Oil, cured me completely of rheumatic pains in my left arm. I recommended it to two of my friends, the Mrs. Donna Juana Garcia, widow, and Mr. D. Herman Decker a German gentleman. Madam Garcia was relieved entirely by the pain-cure from terrible neuralgic pains of ten months standing. Mr. Decker was cured of inexplicable pains by a single application of the cure. My brother used the great remedy for a species of paralysis of the arm. He was entirely relieved from his ailment by one or two applications, after having tried numberless other remedies without effect.

A gourmet explained the other night the reason why he always had a dinner of three courses: "I eat the first," he said, "because one must eat to live; the second, I eat for eating's sake, and the third I eat for the sake of drinking."

General Debility and Liver Complaint.

R. V. PIERCE, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y., says: "Golden Medical Discovery" and "Fowler's" for her liver and general debility, and would recommend them to all sufferers from Liver Complaint, Sour Stomach, and General Debility. Yours fraternally, N. E. HARMON, Pastor M. E. Church, Elmhurst, Ill.

Sweden has given the degree of Doctor of Philosophy to the daughter of an army officer.

W. E. HURSTIS, of Emporia, Kansas, says that his wife had been sick nearly seven years, and for the last four months bedridden. She has been treated by a number of physicians and only grew worse. Her attention was called to Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" and "Favorite Prescription," which she commenced using. In one week she could sit up, and in three weeks could walk about. By druggists.

TORONTO INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION.—The advertisement of this exhibition, popularly known as "Canada's Great Fair" appears in another column. It will take place this year from the 11th to 22nd September. Prize lists will be sent to anyone requiring them by dropping a post card to Mr. Hill, the manager at Toronto. All entries must be made on or before the 25th August. The prizes for live stock, agricultural and dairy products, and ladies' and children's work, are very liberal, and large prizes are offered for horseback riding and driving by ladies. The special attractions this year will be numerous and of a novel character. Full particulars of all the special features in connection with the great fair will be published in programmes shortly. An electric railway, balloon ascensions by a lady aeronaut and electric lights are among them. Others are being arranged for. Cheap rates and excursions will be granted on all the railways. This will be the best time to visit Toronto, and take in the exhibition at the same time.
