MAKING A HUMAN FACE.

Thomas Colt's Thirteen Years of Exper ience Under the Surgeons.

In 1871 Thomas Colt, then 12 years. old, was taken to Bellevue Hospital, New York, suffering from a disease which had destroyed his nose and lips and had begun to affect his eyes. He was taken in charge by Dr. Gustavus Sabine, and since that time has been under treatment with a view to replacing the lost part of the face. After the course of the disease had been checked the process of building up was begun by cutting away the flesh about the edges of the orifice, where the nose had been. Then the inside of the large finger of the right hand was flayed, and the fresh cut wound was fitted where the nose should be. The hand was held in place by bandages and plaster of paris until the finger had grown fast to the forehead and cheeks of the patient. In the meantime the mouth was coverreplied the Arab, with a grin, tying ed by the hand, and a silver tube was inserted into the lad's throat, through which he was fed, and through which he also breathed.

When the grafting of the finger to the face was completed, and the circulation established, the finger was amputated near the knuckle, leaving two and a half joints attached to the face. The operations so far had required about a year, but the process was only begun. The next step was to trim down the finger into the shape of a nose by

The eyes of the unfortunate boy had both been drawn out of position somewhat, and these were straightened by clipping nerves in the manner usually adopted by oculists in treating cross-eyed people. The eyebrows were also patched up at the inner ends.

The next step was to give the boy a new pair of lips. This was done gradually by taking pieces of flesh from the cheeks and grafting them in place bit by bit.

Recently, after thirteen years of experience under a surgeon's kuife, having meantime undergone and recovered from thirty different operations, the patient, now a young man, left the hospital. His face was smooth, and to the casual observer bore no traces of what he had gone through. The case is extraordinary for the extent of the work done and the perfect result obtained. Not less extraordinary was the fortitude of the patient, who never murmured under the necessarily painful operations, and who, when walking the floor because of his suffer. ing, was wons to cheer up the other patients in the ward by telling droll stories, of which he had a large supply. He was known in the hospital as "Patient Tommy."

160 Days Without Food.

Probably the most extraordinary case on record of a person living in a conscious state without eating is that of Miss Kate Smusley of Fort Plain, who is at the point of death because of self-starvation. She is at her father's residence, and it is asserted with a positiveness undisputed by those who attend her that not a particle of food has passed her lips for now over 160 days. She taker a little water in her mouth occasionally, but does not swallow it, as, when swallowed, it at once throws her into convulsions which seem to wrench her stomach most terribly. She is emaciated to a skeleton. She is conscious, recognizes her friends and is able to converse with them.

Perhaps the most extrarordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon-Treatment of catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent of the patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixat once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple and can be dose at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment.
