He intimated that a suitable compensation might take the form of grants of Northwest land.

Sir John Macdonald said the disturbances were long past. They took place before the Dominion was formed, and the claim of the volunteers was upon the Governments of the different Provinces.

Mr. Blake agreed in the view of the last speaker, and said that the Province of Ontario had already taken this view. The Government of the Hon. Sandfield Macdonald had compensated Montgomery for the burning of his barn by the volunteers.

to Frighttul Torture.

A Winnipeg despatch says: At Portage la Prairie lives an old cripple known as the "Hon, Dr." McFarlane. He is given to drink. The other day while he was inebriated a number of young brutes amused themselves by lighting matches and placing them on the back of his hands, while the sulphur was burning-by this barbarous torture blistering the helpless man's hands in a most horrible manner, and causing him to groan with pain. But not satisfied with the demoniacal and savage amusement, they placed old McFarlane on the floor and sat upon his maimed leg, with the idea of straightening it. This disensting performance was so painful that McFarlane yelled with agony. His cries attracted th attention of a person—a woman, it is said who hastily went to ascertain the cause, and who, seeing what was going on, made the men "desist" their inhuman cruelty. A couple of arrests have been made. A policeman is said to have been a passive observer of the barbarous sport. McFarlane is over 70 years of age, and his leg is terribly bent. The attempt to straighten it resulted in a painful rupture.
