

THE HOUSEHOLD.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS. Cheese, when exposed to acid, is likely to produce alarming gastro-intestinal irritation.

Cold tea should be saved for the vinegar barrel. It soures easily and gives color and flavor.

A pound of sugar is one pint, an ounce of any liquid is two tablespoonfuls, a pint of liquid weighs sixteen ounces.

Hot wood ashes applied to a stove when cold will remove grease. Cover the spot entirely; do not be sparing of the ashes.

Silver spoons that have become discolored from contact with cooked eggs, may be easily brightened by rubbing with common salt.

Lemon juice will whiten frosting, cranberry or strawberry juice will color it pink, and the grated rind of an orange strained through a cloth will color it yellow.

One of the best and most convenient receptacles for table cutlery is a canteen flannel knife case tacked to the inside of a cupboard door—to be so constructed that there will be a separate compartment for each knife or fork.

A lump of gum camphor in the closet where silver or plated ware is kept will do much towards preventing tarnish. Coal gas, and the near presence of rubber in any form are two things that cause silver to tarnish quickly.

Any one who doubts as to the best way to have clear jelly is assured on strong evidence and many proofs that to allow the juice to drain through a flannel bag without squeezing it, will render this matter easy and satisfactory.

Better than an iron spoon for miring sponge for bread, and for similar uses is a "muddle" or a piece of oak shaped into a round smooth handle at one end, and the other end flattened like a thick knife blade, then sandpapered smooth.

In a damp closet or cupboard, which is liable to cause mildew, place a saucer full of quick lime, and it will not only absorb all dampness, but sweeten and disinfect the place. Renew the lime once a fortnight, or as often as it becomes slacked.

When a knob comes off a door-handle you can fasten it on again by filling the cavity of the knob with sulphur, then heat the iron end of the handle which goes in the knob just hot enough to melt the sulphur, put the knob in, and let it cool. It will be firmly fixed in place.

The Scientific American states that plush goods and all articles dyed with aniline colors, faded from exposure to light, will look bright as ever after being sponged with chloroform. The commercial chloroform will answer the purpose very well, and is less expensive than the purified.

If children are hungry between meals give them bread or biscuit, as these will "stay the stomach" and not interfere with digestion. I know a family of children who have as much dry bread as they wish between meals, or an apple; never butter or jam or preserve, and they are as healthy and rosy as heart could wish.

Wax beans make a delicious salad. Choose your beans, remove the strings, break in inch long pieces and cook in salt and water. While still warm cover them with a dressing of oil, vinegar, salt and pepper. Be sure and remember in mixing salads the old saying: "A spendthrift for oil, a miser for vinegar, a wise man for salt and a mad man for mixing." Use at least twice as much oil as vinegar.

Free and Easy Manners. When girls assume a swaggering manner upon the street, use coarse expressions, and greet each other with a rough "Hello," they cannot expect much deference from their male friends.

The Dead Sea. The Dead Sea is an old and decrepit salt lake in a very advanced stage of evaporation. It lies several hundred feet below the level of the Mediterranean, just as the Caspian lies several feet below the level of the Black Sea; and as in both cases the surface must once have been continuous, it is clear that the water of either sheet must have dried up to a very considerable extent.

Refinement in Home and Society. Refinement of feeling and perception has a much broader field in which to manifest itself in the narrow circles of home than in the wider sphere of society, where there is so comparatively little to cause friction.

Distinctions to Marry. "It is true," said a young lady, "I scarcely know a girl who wants to marry. They are learning something that will interest them as well as support them, two roles in which husbands just now fall. The truth is we are all so tired away from any desire to marry by seeing how wretched those who do marry are. Where would we look for husbands? Among the snipes and sports and characterless young men that fill our drawing-rooms? They are insufferable as more acquaintances or beaux; who could contemplate them as husbands? I have always thought that if I could find a young man at all like my father I could love him and marry him, but that school of men has vanished from the younger ranks.

Women of the Future. The young men of the future have got to look sharp. In the seminars and colleges whose doors have been opened to girls it is a notable fact that the girls this year have got away with the honors, by a large majority. As there is no institution thus opened which will close its doors against the girls, young men would do well to take their lesson in time. The girls have knocked the doors open to stay, and what is more, they are there to make good use of their opportunities.

A GIRL'S WONDERFUL ENDURANCE.

Living For Three Weeks Without Food. A remarkable instance of endurance and of the possibility of living without food for three weeks has, the Melbourne (Australia) Argus says, recently come to light. On the 12th of May a girl named Clara Crosby, twelve years old, was lost in the bush in the Lilydale district, about twenty-five miles from Melbourne. The locality in which she disappeared was wild and mountainous, and after several search parties had unsuccessfully scoured it, it was concluded that she had perished in some inaccessible spot. It is probable, however, that she would have been found promptly had not erroneous information been given to the search parties that she had been seen proceeding in a certain direction. On the 2nd of June, just three weeks after she was lost, two men, who were looking for a stray horse in some dense scrub in the locality, heard a faint "Co-coe." The men searched, and soon saw the little girl tottering towards them in an ulster, without shoes or stockings on, and in an emaciated condition. She was, however, strange to say, quite sensible. When she lost herself she was proceeding from a house where she had been staying to her mother's, in the neighborhood, and she subsequently gave the following account of her adventures:

"I got out of the paddocks on to the road all right, and went on a long way; but I did not see mother's house. I followed some sheep, and they ran away from me. I lay down and had a little sleep by a path in some long grass, and then I went on again. I got to a house where there was a cart in a shed; but there was nobody at home. I didn't stop till I got into some rushes, which cut my legs, and came to a creek with a tree across it. I lay down in the rushes for the night, and in the morning I crossed the creek on the log. Near the other side a branch broke, and I fell into the water, but managed to cling to the bank. Close by I saw a hollow tree, and I was tired and wanted to sleep, so I went in there. When I woke up I could not look for my way. I went down to the creek five times for water at first. I used to sleep a lot, and as soon as it was night it was day, and when it was day it was night again. On moonlight nights I heard people firing guns, and I heard them knocking-making a fence; but when I coo-ed they did not hear me. I used to sing Salvation Army hymns at first, and pray that someone would come for me. The cows used to come and look at me, but I could not get any milk. I tried to chew a bit of bark, but spat it out, as I thought it would poison me, and I got weaker every day."

Australians are familiar with the agonizing experience undergone by people lost in the bush, and know that in such cases adults, as a rule, do not maintain their mental balance, and that the difficulties of their position are consequently greatly enhanced. This little girl, however—who, by the way, was not accustomed to country life—was actually able to preserve a mental record of the exact number of days during which she was "out of humanity's reach."

Use of Sawdust. The amount of sawdust made by portable steam sawmills that have been travelling through the timber sections of our country has encouraged farmers to utilize it for farm purposes, but the opinions of its value are not agreed. It has been asserted by some that its absorbent powers were excellent, and that for bedding purposes it served an excellent purpose; and it has been largely used in that manner. But by some it is claimed that ordinary damp sawdust will absorb but little. One who had tried the experiment claimed that sawdust that had not passed through any stage of decomposition, when spread upon mowing land, had killed the grass, although saturated with urine and juices of the manure. If this is so it is a matter of interest.

We had always supposed that if sawdust was used as an absorbent and was well mixed with manure it would become charged with the chemical change of the manure in its decomposition, and so become available with the manure. It is a singular fact that sawdust is very slow of decomposition when left to itself, and this has been verified by one who placed a large quantity in his barn yard in the supposition that it would come out in a little time suitable for manure purposes, but which, much to his surprise, after remaining there about one year, was found to be about as fresh as when first placed there, and of no possible use as a fertilizer. It would seem as though sawdust well dried would make an excellent dryer in the manufacture of domestic phosphate, and that the acid would tend to reduce it to such condition as would at least prevent any injurious effects upon growing crops. It is pleasant to use for many purposes. Thrown under a shed in winter where hens are kept to get at the sun, it affords a much warmer footing than the frozen earth.

Attend to the Fall Bedding. When the pasture begins to fall off, the best food should be provided for all the stock, but especially the cows. Horses are always well cared for, but the cows are too often neglected, both as to food, and a supply of pure water. Those farmers who have provided some cooling crops, will find the benefit of the fresh green fodder; these who have not, will now see the disadvantage of being short of feed just at this season. It is very easy to secure this supply of food for the short season. Every farmer has a neglected piece of land, which is bringing in nothing, and which could be made to produce a very profitable crop of green feed. Such an opportunity should not be neglected. Where the supply has been provided, a liberal food should be given daily. It is a mistake to suppose that it is better to give the food for winter, and spare it at this season. When any animal is kept short of food, it goes back rapidly, and more food will be required to make up this lost ground, than would have kept the animal in its normal condition. This is especially true as regards horses; if these are permitted to fall off now for lack of food, they will consume much more than the present gain, in recovering to the normal state. Animals that are intended for fattening, should be kept on full feed, and kept in good condition. The old adage, "It is better to be fat than to be thin," should not be forgotten. It is well summarized in the following words: "It is better to be fat than to be thin."

KILLED BY HIS OWN SON.

A Quarrel in a Farm House Over a Game of Dominion. The county of Morris, N. J. has another murder case, which, following so closely after the killing of James Lan'cut by Samuel Wade, causes much excitement. Thomas Smith, about 45 years of age, was too farmer who managed White Meadows, the country residence of County Collector Mahlon Hoagland, about two miles from the village of Rockaway. He is very excitable and hot tempered, although not addicted to liquor drinking. He has a son named Lodi, aged eighteen years. Late the other evening this boy came into the village and gave himself up to Constable Daniel Morgan, with the startling information that he had killed his father. The story of the fratricide which the young man gave is as follows:

In the evening his father and mother, Reidget Nolen, the work girl, and himself sat down to play dominos, the two former and the two latter being partners. The first game was won by the boy and girl, which so incensed the father that he swept the dominos from the table. The second game was won by the father and mother, which put the former in a more happy mood, but in the third game the boy and girl won, and the father's anger became uncontrollable. He again swept the dominos from the table, and struck his wife. He also caught up from her chair a little girl who was sitting at the table, and threw her to the floor. The son fled into another room. The father followed him with a stick of wood, and declared with an oath too horrible to be repeated that he would kill him. The boy ran down a 32-calibre revolver and fired at him. The father turned and made a move to come toward him. The boy fired and a second time. Still the father came on, and the boy fired a third shot. With this shot the father fell to the floor. He lived only a short time. He uttered nothing but groans. One bullet had struck him in the left shoulder, another in the upper part of one eye, and the third went into the forehead.

The boy then started for Rockaway at once to give himself up. He expressed regret at what had occurred, and said nothing but a fear of danger to his life would have induced him to do what he did. He had always been a quiet, well-behaved boy, and was much liked in the community. The father was a war veteran. Corner J. P. Sticker next day committed young Smith to the county jail at Morristown and proceeded to hold an inquest. During the proceedings Smith made a volent statement to the jury. The other members of the family corroborated his account of the homicide. The proceedings were adjourned until next Tuesday for further testimony. The son says that his father had on several occasions abused his family and had threatened the lives of all. Some time ago they were compelled to flee from the house in the evening and they remained hid in a barn throughout the night.

BRILLIANTS.

Expect nothing from him who promises a great deal. A pleasing countenance is a silent commendation. Have not the cloak to make when it begins to rain. The most manifest sign of wisdom is continued cheerfulness. Love is like honesty—much talked about but little understood. No degree of knowledge attainable by man is able to set him above the want of hourly assistance. You may shrink from the far reaching solitude of your heart, but no other foot than yours can tread there. One who is content with what he has done will never become famous for what he will do, he has lain down to die. Plato will have disciples, but Socrates will have adepts; because if the one knew how to think, the other knew how to die. The winter's frost must rend the burr of the nut before the nut is seen. So adversity tempers the human heart to discover the real worth. Those who, without knowing us, think or speak evil of us, do us no harm; it is not they who attack, but the phantom of their own imagination. Politeness may prevent the want of wit and talents from being observed, but wit and talents cannot prevent the discovery of want of politeness. The beginning of hardships is like the first taste of bitter food—it seems for a moment unbearable; yet, if there is nothing else to satisfy our hunger, we take another bite and find it possible to go on.

Printers' Errors in Bibles.

The recent revision of the Bible has called attention to Bibles generally, and especially those famous for their curious misprints. The earliest is the "Piae-makers' Bible," printed at Geneva in 1681, in which the letter I was substituted for an o in the seventh commandment. The "Vinegar Bible" was published at Oxford in 1717, the word "vineyard" being misprinted "vinegar." In the "Wicked Bible," only four copies of which are now in existence, the negative was left out of the seventh commandment, and the printer was fined £3,000 by Archbishop Laud, though it is said to have been committed to £300. The "Persecuting Printers' Bible," in which the Psalmist is made to say "Printers have persecuted me without a cause," dates from 1708. The "Kiss-to-the-bible" was printed at Oxford early in the present century, the mistake occurring in Matthew xii. 43, and no less than three editions, the latest being 1823, transmitted the word "kiss," in English xvii. 10, into Latin, so that the phrase was "kiss me when I stand upon it." There was also what was called the "Brothers Bible" (1873), so called because Gen. iii. 7 was rendered, "The eyes of both were opened, and they saw themselves naked, and they hid themselves from the face of each other." There were also several other Bibles, some of which were permitted to fall off now

QUEER WEDDINGS.

By one of those fortuitous circumstances which so often are metted provisionally to the matrimonial lottery, a queer wedding happened long ago, and was called as a witness. He followed the coalescencer and the innocent bridegroom to the head of the alley, and the groom cheerfully called to "Clarie" to come out. The papers were examined, the blanks filled out in full, and the wedding ceremony performed then and there.

"Do you have any calls of this kind?" was asked of the preacher. "A great many more than might be supposed. Very often these quiet parties come to my house, usually having first notified me, and are married in the presence of a few witnesses. I had a case of this kind this week, and very reputable people they were. Not long ago I was stopped on the street and called up into a block to marry a couple. After pronouncing them husband and wife, in accordance with my custom, I said 'Let us pray.' The groom abandoned his bride left her standing in the middle of the floor, and walked across the room to a bed, where he knelt throughout prayer. I admitted a sentiment which prompted him to a return, no doubt to a boyhood custom, but in pity for the loneliness of the bride I made the prayer northwardly about."

"It hasn't been ten days since a bride and bridegroom drove up to my door in a delivery wagon. The groom was the regular driver, and upon his rounds he called for his Dulcinea and 'thought he'd just fetch her right up to the parson's.' He was in his shirt sleeves and work clothes; she was dressed in white, with a great cluster of red ribbons knotted at her side. She looked and acted the part of a bride, but he was more like a last year's groom."

Brown's Little Joke. "Why, Brown, how short your coat is," said one day to his friend Brown, who wittily replied: "Yes; but it will be long enough before I get another." Some men spend so much for medicines that neither heal nor help them; that new clothes is between them like angels' visits—few and far between. Internal fevers, weakness of the lungs, shortness of breath and lingering coughs, soon yield to the magic influence of this royal remedy, Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery."

The V shaped corage is very popular in Paris. The former proprietor of Dr. Sage's Cathartic Remedy, for years made a standing, public offer in all American newspapers of $500 reward for a case of catarrh that he could not cure. The present proprietor has removed this offer. All the druggists sell this Remedy, together with "Doan's," and all other appliances advised to be used in connection with it. No catarrh patient is longer able to say "I cannot be cured." You get $500 in case of failure.
