This life is like the ocean wide, with constant ebb and flow; And we the ships upon the tide, A-sailing to and fro ! Each steering for some lovely isle Beyond the setting sun, Hope on each pathway seems to smile, As on our course we run.

Some barks fare well from first to last, With fair winds all the way, And soon their anchorage is cast Within some tranquil bay While other's scarcely leave the shore When dark fogs hover nigh, And loud the angry tempests roar, And lightnings rend the sky.

But let us trim our sails aright, No storms shall overwhelm If we are brave and do the right, And Faith directs the helm ! We'll ride the waves, though mountain high And sing our triumph song, Until we see the haven nigh To which our ships belong !

> The "Mary Jane." BY NORA LAUGHER.

Oh! we are the crew of the " Mary Jane," And right merry boys are we, For the "Mary Jane" is the bonniest craft That sails o'er the briny sea; With a ay, heave ho! away we go Thro' fair and stormy weather, We fear not the wave, our hearts are brave, We messmates pull together.

From Liverpool port she first set sail Across to the western world, Some years since that scud afore the gale; But her sails are still unfurl'd; With, a ay, heave ho! away we go Thro' fair and stormy weather, We fear not the wave, our hearts are brave We messmates pull together.

And so proudly cut we thro' the foam At sixteen knots an hour, That we swell our cap'n's heart with glee For the' the black clouds lower With a ay heave, ho! away we go Thro' fair and and stormy weather, We fear not the wave our hearts are brave, We messmates pull together.

For the "Mary Jane" is the bonniest craft That sails o'er the briny sea, Tho' she and her boys are growing old Staunch friends they'll always be. With a ay, heave, ho! away we go Thro' fair and stormy weather, We fear not the wave, our hearts are brave, We messmates pull together.

> Gleanings By The Sea-BY L. A. MORRISON, TORONTO.

Read Mark VI: 34 to 51; and John VI: 1 to 21. Break Thou the "Bread of Llfe," dear Lord, In love to me; As Thou didst break the loaves beside the sea. So let my soul be fed;

Speak Thou the word, Thou hast the Living Bread, Dear Christ, my Lord.

Bless Thou the "Word of Life," dear Lord, In love to me ; As Thou didst bless the bread by Galilee. Thy blessing multiplies Thy gifts divine;

My soul, in glad surprise, Owns all things Thine. Teach Thou the "Blessed Truth," dear Lord, In love to me; As Thou didst teach of yore, beyond the sea; That though the desert reigns,

If Thou dost call A school-boy's scrip contains Enough for all. Give Thou a willing mind, dear Lord, In love to me : As Thou didst give to them on Galilee.

Who at Thy word and will Did launch away; That I, in trust, may still Thy voice obey. Watch Thou from Hills of Prayer, dear Lord,

As Thou didst watch o'er wind-swept Galilee. The darkness cannot hide, Nor storms destroy ; Whatso' to me betide Shall end in joy.

Come Thou when dangers press, dear Lord, In love to me: As Thou didst come to them, who on the sea Toiled all the weary night To reach the strand; Thy coming brings the light,

It brought the land.

Beecher and the Children. "Mr Beecher was wonderfully fond of children and he always carried oranges and candies in his pockets to help entertain them on the cars. If he saw a poor mother with a baby crying in her arms he would go and comfort it and make it stop its crying where others failed. In coming up from Washington one time a characteristic incident occurred. There were two little children, boy and egirl, ight or nine years old, in the car and they huddled close up together and appeared to be very fond of each other. We had breakfast at Wilmington, but the children did not get off the car, and they had evidently traveled all night without anything to eat. When Mr. Beecher came back from breakfast his arms were laden with good things for the children. Then he talked to them. He found that they were from the South, that their parents had died and that they were on their way to the city to find an uncle whom they expected to meet them. The train was late, what if the uncle should fail to meet them? When the train arrived in Jersey City, Mr. Beecher, got out of the car with the children, walked slowly along, looking around to see if he tould discover any one looking for the in great distress and saw the two children. asked him what he was looking for.

Tears came into the man's eyes, and he ties. explained to the little ones who it was who had befriended them. The two children were soon after seen in Plymouth Church, and they have since then listened to Mr. eecher's sermons frequently.

An Extended Experience,

Writes a well-known chemist, permits me to say that Putnam's Painless Corn Extracthe flesh. It makes no sore spots in a tremor of blushing excitement. the flesh, and consequently is painless.

An old teacher in Maine is credited with a story of wild boys which is remarkable. He says that, years ago, he had in his school seven wild; bad boys, who seemed to have no pleasure so great as that of giving their teacher trouble. A short time ago he happened to visit the State Prison of Maine, and there he found three of his wild boys.

In the Reform School of the same State were the other four! I'm A good teacher, well sustained by his committee, ought to have been able to save some of the seven. Firm and judicious treatment can tame and civilize most wild doys. Not all, we grant; but neven is an inordinate number of incurables for one man's school.

Wild boys, however, be their number small or great, are the bane of our schools and the peril of our civilization. One such in a school of fifty, -one foolish, lawless, irrepressible boy, doubles the toil and anxiety of a teacher. Two of them go far toward undoing all the good a patient and gent le teacher can accomplish. Seven would create absolute chaos.

The wild boy is not, as a general thing, so depraved as he is silly and vain. His teacher is, usually, a kind and conscientious lady, often a young lady, who comes to night?" school every morning clad in bright and dainty cleanliness, with an apron of spotless white, and a heart under it yearning to do her pupils good. The wild boy, who sends her home at night despairing and ashamed, what is he?

There he sits, in his dirty boots and dirty face, sprawling over his desk, a spectacle of indifference and latent rebellion, the centre from which proceeds all the disturbance and demoralization of the school. Often, he is the son of a widow, who has quite lost the power to control him, and looks to the school to do for him what she cannot.

But the "school" is this delicate and highminded young lady, who cannot do battle with a thoughtless and unsavory lout of twice her strength, if not twice her weight. If she expels him, he roams the streets and developes rapidly into a criminal. If she permits him to remain, he spoils her school and embiters her every waking hour.

The time will come when our legislators will wisely provide for such cases; but, in the meantime, well disposed boys can do much towards delivering teachers from the wild ones of their number.

Boys understand boys. They know that these wild, disobediert fellows are usually very ignorant and stupid, and can not stand against the public opinion of the school, if it is clearly expressed.

The gentlemen of a school can prevent the abuse of kind and good teachers if they will end of the year. A similar ratio of increase M. STAUNTON & CO., the best way to do it. Why not a Law-and-Order League in a Mahogany is being introduced into every part of India, where it promises to thrive. The seeds sown have germinated remarkably well, a single pound planted in greenhouses in the southern districts having yielded between three thousand and four thousand plants. It is thought to be quite probable that the world may some day look to India for its mahogany as well as for its quinine. The Eastern product of the latter has already become so extensive and of such superior quality that the ciuchona bark exports of the United States of Colombia are said to have diminished fifty per cent. in five years.

The report of the Federal Life Assurance Company, which will be found elsewhere, is a very satisfactory one. The amount of new business being transacted by the company is very large indeed for a company of its age. This shows that, in adopting the system of life insurance known as the Homans plan, the company did a judicious thing. The business increased from $2,696,454 at the beginning of the year to $5,241,679 at the this year will bring its insurance in force up to very nearly $10,000,000.
