The weight evaporated will thus be seen to be eighty-one ounces, 20 ounces and a fraction, of about 3) per cent. of water. Now there is no fraud about this. Neither is there any fraud in using, as bakers nearly always do, about four ounces of potatoes to each loaf. Potatoes are among the best of She finds that her books but not worth 23 cents a pound, the price paid for bread, as before stated.

perfectly plain to each bread-user that the material of a loaf of bread they pay eleven ents for, in reality only costs about five cents, and that a family, say of five persons using one loaf per day are paying a snug sum during the year which they might and should save. In the four loaves as a test we have roughly :-

Flour ..... 164 oz. (1011bs.) worth 201 cents Water .... 80 ..

Material for four loaves costing 214 " If a house-wife is willing to pay one hundred per cent. or just double as much for bread as the material costs it is her own and that for every loaf per day for the year it it costs her $20. The majority of families in this city take two to three loaves a day, so it becomes $40 to $60 a year which they pay the baker for his services.

If it be worth while to study economy at all these figures are worth considering. They mean the clothing of a child or a man much better than can now be afforded by many a household. They may mean living within the income, of quite a number, and re therefore to all such vital.

To those who urge the extra expense of fuel we would say :- Do not fall into the error of baking every day and serving hot biscuits and buns, but so far as bread is conterned do your baking once a week-say on week easily, as thousands know, and the lder or staler home-baked bread is the nore healthful, digestible and nutritious it becomes. This article is not intended as a lea for baking powders, but to encourage conomy in each and every family, rich or poor, and to perpetuate the good old custom of every mother making the bread her children eat.

The list of questions e mbraced thirty-one, and the Hon. Plumbago could not return a correct answer to a single one of them her husband's affair, but let her remember He grew quite indignant over the examina. tion, elaiming that the only two things which stood in the way of perfect happiness on earth were green watermelons at fifty cents apiece and the house-fly; but the committee were firm, and he was told to jog along.

"De report of de committee will be accepted an' adopted," observed Brother Gardner," an' each member of it will also consider hisself formally thanked. Had de Hon Plumbago been allowed to take dis platform we should hev lost half an hour of our valuable time an' been no wiser. We will now proceed wid de reg'lar purceedin's.''

TO BE INVESTIGATED. The Secretary then read the following communication from Charleston, Ill. : Brother Gardner-We take this opportunity of writing to you with red ink on a blue sheet of paper to ask that Giveadam Jones will come down here and establish a branch of the Lime-Kiln Club. J. B. Mitchell the vashing day, when it can be done at trifling grocer, has offered us the free use of the additional cost. Bread can be kept for a room over his store for one year and thirteen colored men are all ready to be sworn in as charter members. We believe that a branch will secure fifty members here in a month, and probably put a stop to the disappearance of chickens and small pigs and watermelons. In case Elder Toots can come with Giveadam Jones we will organize a camp meeting at the same time. How is the Elder on the shout? We don't care so much about religion, but we want a leader whose voice can be heard two miles against the wind. The gentlemen named will be met at the depot by a string band and forty colored people, and while here they shall drink nothing cheaper than pink lemonade with a stick in Canning and Evaporating Fruit.

The business of canning and evaporating fruits and vegetables has been steadily growing for many years past, until it has now assumed immense proportions. If the work is done properly, which is not always the that early grown fruits and vegetables do not equal, and for this reason the evaporfruit is placed on market. This is a very the horses flanks and he sat down. good plan to follow, and is not only cheaper, but is also more healthy for the consumer. Consumers in general are using canned and evaporated goods more and more each year, and as a natural consequence the evaporating factories are having quite a boom.

conveniently situated should by all means put up enough fruit to supply their own family abundantly during the winter. Good health-giving in its effect on the human system, and oftentimes wards off disease by aiding in digestion, and in this way is not only valuable for what nourishment it contains in itself, but also acts as an appetizer, and by its steady use the other food is better assimilated.

It is much better for the farmer to put up what canned fruit he needs, and he will then know just what he has got, and feel better in using it than when he has to buy it from the factory. Of course the farmer should not expect to compete with the fac- thing. Preserves are desirable to have as a change, and it is best to fix up a certain amount of this variety of sauce, but the simple process of canning is much easier and Scholarly Susan's selection was books; cheaper, and the fruit can then be used little at a time, as is desired, for table use. There should be a supply of dried fruit also prepared for winter use, as it is very easy to accomplish and quite desirable to have, as a change, later in the season. Evaporated fruit is, however, far superior to dried fruit, and should not be classed with it by any means. The process by which it is obtained is altogether different, and like most other articles of superior value or quality, it requires more trouble and expense to During the first process of evaporation over.

intense heat is used, which will effect the outer surface of the fruit only, and will form an impenetrable coating, thus retaining the perfect flavor and other desirable qualities of the fruit.

There are a great many different patterns and styles of evaporators that do good work, but the principal trouble is that they are quite expensive, and can only be used to profit where the business is done on a large scale, and as yet they are not cheap enough for family use.

Nearly all kinds of fruit, and many vegetables, can be evaporated to good advantage, and the field of operation is considerably more extensive than that compassed by the drying method. All the evaporation process does is to draw out the surplus moisture, and when the fruit is used on the table, this moisture can be easily restored. and thus the consumer has a welcome substitute for the genuine articule when it cannot be obtained, and it often is very hard to tell the difference between them.
