But all the grown up an' you was my husband." isso on princely walls never looked so enming to you as those rough hewn rafters. ou can think of no park or arbor trees danted on fashionable country seat so atnetive as the plain brook that ran in front the old farm house and sang under the reping willows. No barred gateway, somed with statue of bronze, and swung per by obsequious porter in full dress, has alf the glory of the swing gate.

Many of you have a second dwelling place, mr adopted home, that also is sacred forsa. There you built the first family altar. here your children were born. All those mes you planted. Each room is solemn, wase once in it, over the hot pillow, flappdthe wings of death. Under that rouf you spect when your work is done to lie down mi die. You try with many words to tell excellency of the place, but you fail. Rere is only one word in the language that as describe your meaning. It is home. Now I declare it, that young man is com-

If it be a tender bird the joint will separate easily as soon as the leg is bent over, but if it be old and tough you will have to feel with the knife for the joint. This thigh joint is tougher and requires more skill in separating than the second joint of a turkey. It lies farther under and nearer the back bone. But practice and familiarity with its location will enable one to strike it accurately. In carving the breast, begin at the wing and cut straight down through the meat of the bone the whole length of the breast, as indicated by the long lines in the cut. Cut down in the same way in parallel slices as thin as can be cut until you come to the ridge of the breast bone. Cut down between the wish bone and the breast to the wing. then slip the knife under the slices at the lower end of the breast and separate them from the bone. Lay them aside, then cut in the same manner on the other side of the breast. Make several cuts at right angles with the breast bone through the skin and stuffing between the breast and tail, and remove the stuffing.

With the fork still in the breast bone, tip the bird over slightly and with the point of the knife remove the delicate portion in the hollow of the side bone; a little may be shaved off from the lower edge of the side bone. Separate the wish bone from the point of the breast. So as soon as the breast is carved remove the fork and disjoint the legs and wings, and begin to serve.
