The Turk

It was August. No sound disturbed the peacefuliness of the usually stirring village of Markdale save now and again the not too distant cling-clang of one or more cow bells upon the mild-eyed kine belonging to some of our village councilmen, or the plaintive bleating of a herd of Drover Shield's lambs. The solitude seemed oppressive but 'twee not to be a thing eternal. A gentle murmur first came softly floating to the par of the ever alert Sporting Editor, who im mediately donned his new plug hat, grasped his cane and sallying forth soon traced the source of the gathering storm to several of our most influential young men, all of high standing in circles agricultural attan informal meeting holding an animated discussion as to the speed merits of their respective horses. How they talked! Classic speech how beautiful thou art when voiced by master minds. The argument, though vigorous and brilliant as it was, suddenly collapsed in a flourish of whole handfuls of bills with the Government flat stamped thereon. "Money talks," says John Henry. "Put up," says Jas. W. and then a wager was made by J. W. Sproule that his recently purchased gray gelding, "Willie D," a valuable horse well-known in sporting circles, could out trot Mr. John Henry Carson's famous B. G. "Rodger," formerly called "old hundred," and a twin brother to the world renowned Old Eathen Allen, the first horse that ever trotted a mile under 2.20 which feat he successfully accomplished over 30 years ago. John Henry never smiled; his big, genial baby-like face looked sad; lips pressed firmly together; cheeks deadly pale; a cold far-off look in his eye, yet gleaming with determination; hope seemed almost dead within his great ox-like heart; a cold clammy sweat stood out in great glistening beads upon his noble brow; his curly golden locks were damp and disheveled and the pink wart upon the lobe of his left ear had turned to a sickening purple. As he mounted his sulky his gan at once to establish the man lips for the first time moved gently as if in silent | cent plant which has been the pri prayer. Judges, Reeve McFarland, John Lyons and John B. Thibadeau. These gentlemen were selected as judges on account of the fairness of judgment and superior knowledge of horses. The horses got a good send off and came down the half mile at lightninglike speed. Old Rodger took the lead, holding it to the finish, being the winner by over 30 feet. The scene changes and we now see John Henry's face beaming with a glow like that of a nigger in a Kentucky melon patch. While James W, with one quick, fierce and terrible glance of hatred at poor innocent old Rodger, then pressing his left hand to his heart fell upon the soft grass and wept. After the weeper had wept his last weep the Rodger which the crowd heartily responded to, then lighted their telephone cigars and STANDARD office.—Chatsworth No Directory.
