PROGRESS ON THE CONGO.

The Limits Just Placed Upon the Liquor Traffic Barriers Against the Arabs.

White sojourners in the Congo country are hemselves astonished at the number and mportance of the measures now under way for the protection of the many thousands of natives against murder and rapine, and to spread order and civilization throughout the great river basin. Every mail from Europe brings news of fresh edicts to be enforced, of new police or educational measures to carried out, of new steamboats coming new expeditions projected. The best of s that the natives are beginning to grasp the idea that all this conduces to their material advantage, safety, and welfare, and they are therefore becoming more amenable to discipline and law. The State is dealing with them as with the Arabs, gently if possible, but is employing severer means, if necessary, to enforce obedience and respect.

All philanthropists will feel grateful to forty miles west of Leopoldville, and the country between it and the Atlantic Ocean has been so long occupied by white liquor traders that it will not be possible, all at once, to carry out drastic measures for the suppression of the traffic. The trade, howvolume will be diminished, if possible, by taxes imposed upon the dealers. The Congo State is thus showing itself to be a most beneficent and effective agent in the protection of the people against one of the greatest evils that threaten them.

The State has at last succeeded in hemming in the Arab slave dealers on the west and north, limiting their further raids down the Congo and along its branches.
